Unit 1

Family and Marriage

I. Warm-up Questions

1. Could you tell me something about your family?
2. Do you feel it difficult to communicate with your parents? Is there anything in your mind that you would rather not tell them?
3. Do you prefer big families or small families? Give the reasons.
4. What do you think of the phenomenon that college students fall in love with each other?
5. What type of man or woman would you like to make friends with?
6. What do you think of the same sex marriage?
7. What do you think of the idea of adults living together without being married?
8. Why do so many people divorce today?

II. Read / Listen the Following Passages

1. East Is East and West Is West

After Arun Bharat Ram returned home with a degree from the University of Michigan, his mother announced that she wanted to find him a wife. Arun would be a good “catch” anywhere: 27 years old, good education, well mannered, intelligent, handsome—and, not incidentally, heir to one of the largest fortunes in India. Nonetheless, Arun would not consider selecting a wife on his own.

Arun's mother already had someone in mind. Manju, who came from a solid, middle-class family, was also a college graduate. Arun and Manju met in a coffee shop in a luxury hotel—along with both sets of parents. He found her pretty and quiet. He liked that. She was impressed that he didn't boast about his background.

After four more meetings, the parents asked their children if they were willing to marry. Neither had any major objections.

The prime minister of India and fifteen hundred other guests came to the wedding.

"I didn't love him," Manju says. "But when we talked, we had a lot of things in common." She then adds, "But now I couldn't live without him. I've never thought of another man since I met him."

Although India has undergone extensive social change, Indian sociologists estimate that about 95 percent of marriages are still arranged by the parents. Today, however, as with Arun and Manju, couples have veto power over their parents' selection. Another innovation is that the couple are allowed to talk to each other before the wedding—unheard of just a generation ago.

2. Movie: Love Story (1970)

One of the most popular tearjerkers ever, Love Story tells the tale of Jenny (Ali McGraw), a poor college student from Rhode Island, and Oliver (Ryan O'Neal), a rich law student from Boston, who fall in love while attending college. Despite opposition to their relationship from Oliver's wealthy father, the two get married. After graduation, Oliver takes a job at a prestigious legal firm in New York, and everything seems to be going well for the couple. However, tragedy strikes when Jenny is diagnosed with a fatal illness. As a result, Oliver must face a future without the woman he loves. This timeless film, based on Erich Segal's novel, featured the famous tag line "Love means never having to say you're sorry."

3. Britain's Prince Charles to Marry Camilla Parker Bowles (listening)

III. Class Activities

Discussion:

1. What is your opinion of the marriage of Arun and Manju?
2. Does the story of Arun and Manju still happen in China today?
3. If you have seen the movie Love Story, what do you think of the marriage of Oliver and Jenny?
4. If your parents were strongly opposed to your marriage with somebody, what would you do?
5. What are your major considerations when you plan to get married?
6. What type of family do you think is an ideal one?
7. What are the responses of the Queen Elizabeth and Prince Phillip to the Marriage between Prince Charles and Camilla? And how about the Prime Minister Tony Blair, the Archbishop, and Britons?
8. What have you learned from the passage about Mrs. Parker Bowles? What did princess Diana think of her? Will she be the Queen when Charles becomes monarch?

Role Play:

Break the students into different groups. The students of each group are supposed to work together and crank out a short drama based on the episodes provided above. Then let the students themselves play various roles and act out their dramas in the classroom.

Debating:

1. Love and money.

The affirmative team would argue: Love can be bought by money. The negative team would argue: Love can not be bought by money.

2. Love at first sight.

The affirmative team would argue for the idea while the negative team would argue against it.

3. Spare the rod and spoil the child.

Divide the class into two groups and debate on the idea, which is still popular in many people's minds.

V. More Information

Types of Families

There are many types of families. The smallest family is that of two persons such as a husband and a wife, a parent and a child, or a brother and a sister. These units are kinds of nuclear families. Nuclear families include any two or more persons related to one another by blood, marriage, or adoption and who share a common residence. When the unit includes a husband and a wife, it is considered a conjugal family as well. Almost everyone is born and reared in a nuclear family unit consisting of self, parents, and sometimes siblings. There are also the family of orientation (the family in which an individual grows up) and the family of procreation (the family formed when a couple have their first child).

Nuclear and conjugal families as isolated and independent units are very rare in the world. In most societies the extended family is the norm. This type goes beyond the nuclear family unit of parents and children to include relatives such as grandparents, aunts, uncles, or cousins. American families typically have what is called a modified extended family structure. When couples marry they are likely to form a household separate from either set of parents. Yet they maintain close ties with their families of orientation.

Interactions with relatives beyond the nuclear or modified extended family are termed kin, or kinship, relationships. All societies have rules for defining kin groups and how these relationships are organized—who lives together; who is the head of the family; who marries whom; how mates are selected; which relatives, family, and kin groups are most important; and how children are to be reared and by whom. While these rules and systems vary greatly, certain general rules determine the statuses and roles.

Forms of Marriage

A fundamental variation in families is the norm that defines the number of spouses. Every society permits some form of marriage. The most common form of marriage is that of an exclusive relationship between two people. This is termed monogamy and is the only norm that is universally recognized. It is also the predominant form even in societies where norms permit other forms to exist.

Several alternatives to monogamy can be found in various parts of the world. Marriage to more than one person is referred to as polygamy, which includes both the marriage of one man to more than one wife (polygyny) and one woman to more than one husband (polyandry). Polygyny is common, whereas polyandry is rare. Also rare is group marriage, in which a number of men are married to a number of women. Group marriage exists chiefly among subcultures. Within the United States three new marital and family lifestyles seem to be emerging in the second half of the 20th century: unmarried partners living together, e. g. nonmarital heterosexual cohabitation, childless marriages, and dual-career marriages.

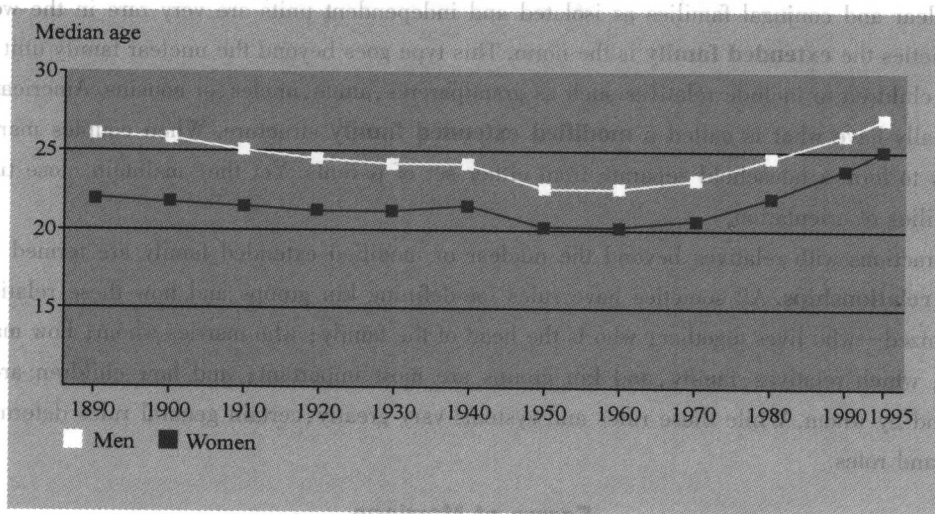

Marriage Laws

The marriage laws of most Western nations are the products of Roman Catholic canon law that has been greatly modified by the changed cultural and social conditions of modern life. Modern marriage law regards marriage as a civil transaction and allows only monogamous unions. In general, the legal capacity of a person to marry is the same all over the Western world and is subject only to impediments such as blood relationship and, in some cases, mental incapacity. The minimum age limits for marriage, which were previously 12 years or even younger, have been revised upward in most countries to between 15 and 21 years of age.

As the following Figure shows, in the wake of a sharp decline during and after World War II (1939 - 1945), the age at which men and women in the United States first marry has steadily increased. In the mid-1990s, the age of first marriage for women was higher and closer to the age at which men first marry than at any time in the previous 100 years.

Choice of Marriage Partners

All societies have rules concerning the appropriateness or unacceptability of certain types of marriage partners. These rules can be divided into two categories: exogamy, in which people must marry outside their group; and endogamy, which requires that people entering marriage should share certain group characteristics.

Wedding Vows

Male

I , take you , to be my wedded wife. To have and to hold, from this day forward, for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, in sickness or in health, to love and to cherish 'till death do us part. And hereto I pledge you my faithfulness.

Female

I, , take you , to be my wedded husband. To have and to hold, from this day forward, for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, in sickness and in health, to love and to cherish, 'till death do us part. And hereto I pledge you my faithfulness.

Wedding Ceremony

There is no end to the number and types of wedding ceremonies. Some are steeped in tradition. Others are as new as new age. Taking into consideration your faith, denomination, and the requirements of the governing body and/or the minister or official who is going to perform the ceremony, you must determine how much leeway (回旋的余地) you will be given in modifying traditional vows or whether or not you will be given the opportunity of creating your own ceremony and/or vows.

The elements of a wedding ceremony are somewhat universal although they may be embellished and their chronology be modified from ceremony to ceremony. Here are some of the major elements:

- 1) The Greeting;
- 2) The Declaration of Intentions (Wedding Vows);
- 3) The Exchange of Rings;
- 4) Blessings and Readings;
- 5) The Pronouncement.

VI. Communication Tips

The Status of Same-sex Marriage in the U. S.

Currently, only one man and one woman can be joined in matrimony and have their marriages recognized by the state, except for a few same-sex couples in Massachusetts who successfully won a court battle for the right to marry. Same-sex couples can marry in San Francisco since February 12, 2004, because of an action by their mayor. However, the state of California refuses to register the marriages. Similar actions have been taken in New Mexico and New York. By November of 2003, 37 states have enacted Defense of Marriage Acts (DOMAs) that ban same-sex marriage. Other states have similar legislation pending. The status of same-sex marriage across the U. S. by November of 2003 is shown as follows:
