Preface

This book covers the influence of landscape design from many corners of the world. Gardens now play an important role in the psyche of city and suburban living. They need to be practical, but importantly they need to look good and with the input of good design, can transform a garden into something unique and special. Gardens should be fun, they should be a place where you can enjoy time with families and friends and they should also be a sound investment in property value. Gardening crosses through all cultures and religions and for this, it is a special way of bonding societies, communities and cities.

—Jim Fogarty

Baan Sansuk is an exclusive residential project, located at Hua Hin, Thais' favorite beach. The site is a long, noodle-like with a small narrow side connected to the beach. There are 2 rows of buildings on both sides, leaving a long space in the middle of the site. Basically, most of the units, except the beach-front ones, do not have any ocean View. Instead they are facing the opposite units.

Designers' first move is to bring "the view" into the property instead. The inspiration of "the view" comes from the location of the project. Hua Hin, in Thai, means stone Head. The name comes from the natural stone boulders in its beach area. So they proposed a series of swimming pools from the lobby to the beach area, a total of 230m long.

The pools are divided into several kinds, with different functions like reflecting pool, kids pool, transitional pool, jacuzzi pool and main pool. At some certain area, they strategically place natural stone boulders to mimic the famed local beach. The result is a breath-taking water landscape, with different water characters from one end of the site to the other. These pools are not just for eye-pleasure only, but they also serve as the pools for everyone in the family.
