Many international students are undecided about the major they should choose when studying overseas. Most would like to become "managers" and therefore decide they want to study "business". In addition, students would like to have the possibility of migrating to Australia and therefore choose a major where they can gain extra migration points. These motivations of choosing a major are quite simplistic as there are many more factors to consider about your overseas experience. The tips below will help you understand your motivation for studying overseas. After you have understood your goals, you should weigh up the different forces in choosing your major. China, an old civilization with youthful vigor and a vast land of charm, beauty, and varied national customs, is one of the world's most attractive and exciting countries for ____ 1 _____. In 2002, 97.71 million tourists visited China, and foreign exchange earning from tourism reached US $67.06 billion. The income from domestic ____ 2 ____ also grew by a large margin, amounting to 352.2 billion yuan in 2001. Among China's numerous places of historic ____ 3 _____ and scenic beauty, Xi'an is famous for being the starting point of the Silk Road. Suzhou is well known for its gardens, and Hang Zhou, for the beautiful West Lake. Guilin on the bank of the Li River is said to have the most spectacular ____ 4 _____ in China. And also many other cities have drawn hundreds and thousands of tourists who are interested in the culture and ____ 5 _____ of China's ethnic minorities.

4. Directions: Translate the following paragraph into Chinese.

As well as income, tourism creates employment. Some jobs are found in travel agencies, tour operators and other intermediaries supplying services in the generating areas, but the bulk of jobs are created in the tourist destinations themselves, ranging from hotel staff to deck-chair attendants, from excursion booking clerks to cleaners in the stately homes open to the public.

A very large number of these jobs are seasonal so that tourism's contribution to full-time employment is considerably less than its contribution to "job-hours." But one must remember that many of these jobs are being created in areas where there would be few alternative employment opportunities. Tourism is therefore relatively beneficial.
