Part One The Sentence

Chapter One

Sentence Sense

A good writer should first of all know what makes an English sentence. He should develop sentence sense which is the ability to identify the basic grammatical elements in a sentence and the understanding of the relationships between these elements.

Elements of a Sentence

The basic parts of English sentences are subjects and predicates. Understanding them is an important step toward mastering a number of sentence skills.

Every sentence has a subject and a verb. Who or what the sentence speaks about is called the subject; what the sentence says about the subject is called the predicate. In the following sentences, the subject is underlined once and the verb twice:

People laugh.

The bus stopped.

He waved at me.

She is short.

That woman is a professor.

Kinds of Sentences

Sentences can be divided into four basic groups according to the number and kinds of clauses they contain. These four basic types are simple, compound, complex, and compound-complex sentences.

The Simple Sentence

A simple sentence contains only one independent clause and no dependent clause.

- a. The game ended early.
- b. My bike was repaired three times last week.
- c. The lake has been polluted by a chemical factory.
- d. He stood up and closed the window.
- e. The children smiled and walked towards us.

The Compound Sentence

A compound sentence is made up of two (or more) simple sentences. The two complete sentences in a compound sentence are usually connected by a comma plus a joining word (and, but, for, or, nor, so).

A compound sentence is used when you want to give equal weight to two closely related ideas. The technique of showing that ideas have equal importance is called coordination.

Following are some compound sentences. Each sentence contains two ideas that the writer considers equal in importance.

- a. The rain increased, so the officials canceled the game.
- b. Martha wanted to go shopping, but Fred refused to drive her.
- c. Tom was watching television in the family room, and Marie was upstairs on the phone.
- d. I had to give up running in the morning, for I had got a sore throat.

The Complex Sentence

A complex sentence contains a simple sentence (a complete statement) and a statement that begins with a dependent word. Here is a list of common dependent words:

after	if, even if	when, whenever although, though	in order that	where, wherever as	since	whether
because	that, so that	which, whichever
before	unless	while even though	until	who
how	what, whatever	whose

A complex sentence is used when you want to emphasize one idea over another in a sentence. Look at the following complex sentence:

Because I overslept, I missed the final exam.

The idea that the writer wishes to emphasize here: I missed the final exam — is expressed as a complete thought. The less important idea — Because I overslept — is subordinated to the complete thought. The technique of giving one idea less emphasis than the other is called subordination.

Note

The two parts of a complex sentence are sometimes called an independent clause and a dependent clause. A clause is simply a word group that contains a subject and a predicate. An independent clause expresses a complete thought and can stand alone. A dependent clause does not express a complete thought in itself and “depends on” the independent clause to complete its meaning. Dependent clauses always begin with a dependent or subordinating word.

Following are some other examples of complex sentences. In each case, the part starting with dependent word is the less emphasized part of the sentence.

- a. While my granny was eating breakfast, she began to feel sick.
- b. I checked my money before I invited Tom for lunch.
- c. When Arthur lost his temper, he also lost his job.
- d. Although I practiced for three months, I failed my driving test.

The Compound-Complex Sentence

* The compound-complex sentence consists of two (or more) simple sentences and one (or more) dependent statement. In the following examples, a solid line is under the simple sentences and a dotted line is under the dependent statements.

- a. When the power line snapped, Jack was listening to the stereo, and Linda was reading in bed.
- b. After I returned to school following a long illness, the math teacher gave me make-up work, but the history teacher made me drop her course.

General Idea About Coordination and Subordination

Coordination and subordination are ways of showing the exact relationship of ideas within a sentence. Through coordination we show that ideas are of equal importance. When we coordinate, we use the words such as and, but, for, or, nor, so, yet. Through subordination we show that one idea is less important than the other. When we subordinate, we use dependent words like when, although, since, while, because, and after. A common list of dependent words has been given in the second part of this chapter.

Exercises

I. Directions: In each of the following sentences, draw one line under the subject and two lines under the verb.

1. The police questioned him about his whereabouts last night.
2. Jim turned on the radio.
3. The warm sunshine felt good on my bare legs.
4. Our backyard is knee-deep in weeds.
5. She cut the colorful paper into pieces with the scissors.
6. One lonely neon light glowed in the distance.
7. The kite soared into the sky at the end of a taut, vibrating string.
8. The squirrel leaped from one tree branch to another.
9. The top of my pen always disappears after a day or two.

10. On Friday night, the Gammons visited their friends, the Browns, and they all played cards.

II. Directions: On separate paper, write.

Three sentences with a single subject and a verb.

Three sentences with a single subject and a double verb.

Three sentences with a double subject and a single verb.

In each case, underline the subject once and the verb twice.

III. Directions: Combine the following pairs of simple sentences into compound sentences. Use a comma and a logical joining word (and, but, for, so) to connect each pair.

Example: We hung up the paint.

The wall still looked bare.

We hung up the paint, but the wall still looked bare.

1. I am studying computer science.
My sister is majoring in communications.
2. The children started hitting each other.

She wanted to stop wrinkles from forming.
4. I was sick with the flu.
I still had to study for the test.
5. She felt faint.
She grabbed the metal lamppost.

IV. Directions: Use logical dependent words to combine the following pairs of simple sentences into complex sentences. Place a comma after a dependent statement when it starts the sentence.

Examples: I obtained a creditcard.

I began spending money recklessly.

When I obtained a creditcard, I began spending money recklessly.

Alan dressed the turkey.

His brother greased the roasting pot.

Alan dressed the turkey while his brother greased the roasting pot.

1. The movie disgusted Karen.

4. The boy was in a motorcycle accident.
The boy limps.
5. I can save enough money.
I'll go to Australia next summer.

V. Directions: Read through each sentence to get a sense of the entire meaning. Then insert a logical joining word (and, but, for, or so) and a logical dependent word (because, since, when, or although).

1. _____ working at the construction site all day, Tom decided not to meet his friends at the dinner, _____ he was too tired to think.
2. _____ the projector broke for a second time, some people in the audience hissed, _____ others shouted for a refund.
3. Nothing could be done _____ the river's floodwaters receded, _____ the townspeople waited helplessly in the emergency shelter.
4. _____ you are ever sent damaged goods, the store must replace the items _____ it must issue a full refund.
5. Sears had the outdoor grill I wanted, _____ the clerk wouldn't sell it to me _____ it was the floor sample.

VI. Directions: Use coordination or subordination to combine the groups of simple sentences into one or more longer sentences in the following.

Example: My car is not starting on cold mornings.

I think the battery needs to be replaced.

I already had it recharged once.

I don't think it would help to charge it again.

Because my car is not starting on cold mornings, I think the battery needs to be replaced. I already had it recharged once, so I don't think it would help to charge it again.

1. Gina had worn glasses for fifteen years.
She decided to get contact lenses.
She would be able to see better.
She would look more glamorous.
2. The children at the day care centre took their naps.
They unrolled their sleeping mats.
They piled their shoes and sneakers in a corner.

He had been overwhelmed with emergency calls.

Chapter Two

Effective Sentences

Unity

Unity is one of the fundamental qualities of effective writing. Unity in sentences helps to make ideas clear. A unified sentence means that all its parts should directly relate to a single complete thought or impression. That is to say everything in the sentence should contribute to making one clear idea. If any parts of the sentence, such as clauses, phrases or even words are not closely related in expressing a complete thought, it is a violation of the unity principles.

1. Bring into a sentence only related thoughts; put unrelated thoughts in another sentence or sentences.

Unrelated: We paid a porter two dollars for taking our luggage to our rooms, and the hotel lobby was very elegant.

Related: We paid a porter two dollars for taking our luggage to our rooms. We found that the hotel lobby was very elegant. (If the parts are not sufficiently related to making one sentence, you can divide them into two separate sentences.)

Unrelated: I was nervous, and I combed my hair a dozen times and I looked in the mirror over and over to make sure my false eyelashes hadn't come unglued.

Related: I was really nervous before my first date. I combed my hair a dozen times and I looked in the mirror over and over to make sure my false eyelashes hadn't unglued. (The relationship of the two ideas is made clear by the addition of the phrase, before my first date.)
