(15 minutes)

N (for NO) if the statement contradicts the information given in the passage;
NG (for NOT GIVEN) if the information is not given in the passage.

For questions 8 -10, complete the sentences with the information given in the passage.

Whales and Whaling

The whale lives its entire life in water but it is not a fish. It is a mammal, a warm-blooded animal that gives birth to living young ones and suckles them with its milk. The whale has lungs instead of gills(鳃), and will drown if kept under the water too long. It does not have scales. Its skin is smooth, though some whales have thin hair growing on the snout(长鼻) and the top of the head. The growth of hair shows that this sea animal once had fur, just as most land mammals have. The whale has a well-developed brain and nervous system, as other mammals have.

Big Size and Other Characteristics

Some species of whales are only four or five feet long when fully grown. Others, such as the blue whale, or sulphur-bottom, are by far the largest and heaviest animals that ever lived. One has been measured that was 113 feet long and weighed more than 150 tons. The largest of the giant dinosaurs(恐龙) that roamed the earth during the Age of Reptiles weighed probably only about 50 tons.

A whale can grow so big because it lives in water, which helps to support its weight. If a land animal gets too big and heavy, its legs cannot hold it up and it is unable to move about. It cannot get sufficient food, and falls an easy prey to agile(动作敏捷的) animals. If a bird is too heavy, its wings cannot support it in the air. But water is so dense that it permits whales to grow larger than land and air animals.

Whales differ in size and in other characteristics, but they are all remarkably alike in outline. They have long, streamlined bodies that taper(渐细) toward the tail. There are no external divisions between the head, trunk, and tail. All whales have paddlelike flippers(鳍) on the forepart of the body, and all have paired, horizontal flukes(裂片) at the end of the tail.

Origin and Adaptation

Zoologists believe that the ancestors of all whales were land-dwelling mammals. The skull bones and teeth of fossil whales form a link between present-day whales and the Creodonts, a type of flesh-eating mammal that became extinct about sixty million years ago.

In the millions of years since they left the land, whales have become almost completely adapted to water life. A warm-blooded animal could not survive in the cold depths of the ocean without protection. Whales are protected from cold by a thick cushion of tough, fatty tissue called blubber(脂肪), lying just beneath the skin. The forelegs have been modified into flippers, which help steering and balancing. The bones of the flippers are like those of the forelegs and feet of land mammals. The hindlegs have disappeared except for small remaining parts on some whales.

The tail makes up about a third of the whale's body. It has strong, springy muscles that move the back end of the whale up and down. This motion, together with the bending of the flukes, gives the whale a powerful forward drive. Finback whales can travel at a speed of about thirty-five land miles per hour for some distance, and have been known to go faster in short bursts of speed.

Whales see better under than above water, but they can see perfectly well above the surface. Whales have no external ears except tiny openings into the inner ear canals. Water is such a good conductor of sound that no external ears are necessary.

How Whales Breathe

One of the most remarkable adaptations to water life is the whale's breathing mechanism. Its respiratory(呼吸的) system is completely separated from its digestive tract. This is why it can eat under water without drowning. The whale cannot breathe through its mouth, because its windpipe and lungs are connected only with the nasal(鼻腔的) passages. The outer opening of the nasal passages, the blowhole, is on the top of the head. Toothed whales have one blowhole, and baleen whales have two. The blowholes stay tightly closed while the whale is under water. Whales ordinarily stay beneath the surface from five to fifteen minutes, but some kinds have been known to submerge for more than an hour. This is possible because the whale has a specialized network of blood vessels that slowly and thoroughly uses all the oxygen in the animal's lungs.

The air becomes moist(潮湿的) and heated while it is held in the lungs. When the whale surfaces and breathes, this warm air is expelled from the blowholes. As it strikes the outside, colder air, it forms a visible column of vapor called a spout(水柱).

Feeding

Whales are divided into two main groups according to their equipment for obtaining food. Toothed whales have simple, cone-shaped teeth in the lower jaw or in both jaws. The teeth are used only to catch prey, which is swallowed whole. Most toothed whales feed on shellfish, squid, and small fish.

Baleen, or whalebone, whales have thin parallel sheets of ballen hanging in two rows from the roof of the mouth down into the immense sac(囊) below the lower jaws. Baleen is a substance much like that of our fingernails. It may be white, yellow, or black, according to the kind of whale. The baleen sheets are triangular and are smooth on each side and at the outer edges. The inner edges are frayed into stiff bristles which form a strainer(滤网).

Baleen whales feed on plankton(浮游生物), especially that composed of shrimplike creatures called krill. The feeding whale swims with its mouth open. Then it closes its mouth and brings its great tongue up, forcing the water out between its upcurved lips but keeping the food, which is caught on the baleen fringes(边). Some baleen whales feed on small fish when krill cannot be had.

Social Behavior

Whales seem to have a well-developed social sense. Most of them travel in schools, or herds. They play together and they show affection for one another. A bull whale will fight to protect its mate and young. The female, or cow, will risk its life defending its calf, and the calf will fight to death for its mother.

The gestation period(孕期) of whales is less than a year, and most whale cows give birth to young only about every two years. There is usually one calf, but occasionally twins are born. At birth the calf is from one third to one half as long as the mother and is able to swim. Calves stay with their mothers and are suckled for several months.

Questions 47 to 56 are based on the following passage.

Advertising can be thought of “as the means of making known in order to buy or sell goods or services”. Advertising 47 to increase people’s awareness and arouse interest. It tries to inform and to persuade. The media are all used to spread the message, and the press offers a 48 cheap method. Magazines are used to reach special sections for local markets. Television, although more expensive, can be very 49. Posters are quite cheap and more permanent in their power of 50. Other ways of increasing consumer interest are through exhibitions and trade fairs as well as direct mail advertising.

We might ask whether the cost of advertising is paid for by the 51 or by the consumer. Since advertising forms part of the cost of production, which has to be covered by the selling price, it is 52 that it is the customer who pays for advertising. However, if large-scale advertising leads to increased demand, production costs are 53, and the customer pays less.

It is difficult to measure 54 the influence of advertising on sales. When the market is growing, advertising helps to increase demand. When the market is shrinking, advertising may 55 a bigger fall in sales than would occur without its support. What is clear is that businesses would not pay large sums for advertising if they were not 56 of its value to them.

Section B

Directions: There are 2 passages in this section. Each passage is followed by some questions or unfinished statements. For each of them there are four choices marked A), B), C) and D). You should decide on the best choice and mark the corresponding letter on Answer Sheet 2 with a single line through the center.

Passage One

Questions 57 to 61 are based on the following passage.

My interest in Chinese food started many years ago, when I had my first job. I was a young reporter for the Daily Journal in San Francisco. Our office wasn't far from China town. I usually managed to arrange my schedule so that I could go there at least two or three times a week for a good meal.

The first time I ever ate Chinese food I loved it. And since then, it just tastes better and better to me. The first thing I noticed was the fresh taste of meat and vegetables. When I learned more about the food, I began to understand why it has this unique feature.

About 5,000 years ago, China lost much of its wood because of over-population and poor management of its forests. This loss was very bad for the country, of course, it turned out to be good for the food. Wood became very expensive and hard to get, so the Chinese had to either find a substitute for their valuable wood, or learn how to use it better. There weren't any substitutes available, so people found ways to economize.

In order to economize in cooking, they had to use very little wood. So they started cutting their meat and vegetables into small pieces before they put them in the hot oil. In that way, the food cooked faster and saved their fuel. The food prepared in this manner kept its fresh flavor and it's this flavor that attracts people to the art of Chinese cooking.

I often wonder if the Chinese understood their solution to that ancient energy crisis as much as I do now – whenever I eat Chinese food.

Passage Two

Questions 62 to 66 are based on the following passage.

Chess must be one of the oldest games in the world. An Arab traveler in India in the year 900 wrote that it was played "long long ago". Chess was probably invented in India, and it has been played everywhere in the world, from Asia to Europe, from America to Africa ever since 1400. The name "chess" is interesting. When one player is attacking the other's king, he says in English "check mate". These words came from the Persian words of "Shan mat", which means "the king is dead". That is when the game is over, and one player has won.

Though such an old game changes very slowly, its present rules haven't always been the same as they used to. For example, at one time the queen could only move one square at a time. Now she is the strongest piece on the board. It would be interesting to know why this has happened.

Chess takes time and thought, but it is a game for all kinds of people. You don't have to be a champion in order to enjoy it. Nor is it always played by two people sitting at the same table. The first time the Americans beat the Russians was in a match played by radio. What's more, some of the chess masters are able to play many people at the same time. The record was set when one man played 400 games. It is also said that some people play chess by post, which must make chess the slowest game in the world.
