Part II

Reading Comprehension (Skimming and Scanning) (15 minutes)

Directions: In this part, you will have 15 minutes to go over the passage quickly and answer the questions on Answer Sheet 1. For questions 1-7, choose the best answer from the four choices marked A), B), C) and D). For questions 8-10, complete the sentences with the information given in the passage.

Let Shortness Out of the Way

Height

What is the secret ingredient that will make you attractive to single women? It is your HEIGHT. How tall you are is very, very important to women. And, sadly for many of us short men, being short is one thing that cannot be changed. If you are overweight, you can go on a diet and lose weight to become more attractive to women. If you are poor, you may be able to get a job or gain a promotion to become richer. You can then dress better. If you smoke, you can give up the cigarettes and if you are an alcoholic, you can give up the alcohol. There is no way you are going to get any taller, though. Wearing shoes with high heels just brings attention to your lack of height and displays to both men and women how self-conscious you are about your height. So you get angry at women wanting something in you that you can't change. That is the way I felt, but the solution is to date single women that are the same height as you or shorter. Easy.

Protection

The reason women enjoy the company of men that are their height or taller goes way back to when men were expected to protect, shelter and provide for women. A somewhat outdated notion now, but elements of this mentality exist subconsciously in women's minds today. Women think, "How can a man who is short protect and shelter me from harm?" Taller men are perceived to have more muscle and more strength. Women feel safer in the arms of a man who can surround them and protect them from outside dangers. Some women feel that this is "natural" and feel more "comfortable" this way. Some men also feel like this. Some men also find taller women intimidating. The good thing is that shorter men can still provide women with all these needs. All a guy needs is a shorter woman, and he can provide her with the same feelings a guy 12 inches taller can provide for a taller woman.

A Better Choice

You are now thinking, great, now I've got to eliminate all those tall, long-legged, slender single women that I dream of. Don't look at it that way. I prefer to look at it in a more positive way. The smarter reader is going to realize that chasing taller women, who are not interested in shorter men anyway, is a complete waste of time. You can utilize your time better by chatting only to single women shorter than or the same size as you. Don't forget to allow for the additional height women gain by wearing high-heeled shoes when judging a woman's height. Believe me, there are some very attractive and desirable shorter women around. Some of them are as pretty and as cute as others and they aren't necessarily overweight. So the next time you enter a nightclub or bar, don't even look at the taller women—head straight to the nearest women who are the same height as you or shorter.

Less Competition

You'll find that even a lot of taller men don't bother with women who are a great deal shorter than them. That leaves you with less competition. The guys 6'3" and above are chasing the women 5'10" or taller. If you are 5'10", then any woman from 5'4" to 5'10" is your go. Not a bad range, is it? If you are 5'6" (like me) or less, that still leaves you with plenty of women to meet. One thing you should always remember is that men are generally taller than women anyway. Another thing you need to know is that the taller the woman, the more likely it is that she will prefer the company of a taller man. A 6'0" woman is more likely to be with a taller man than a woman, say, 5'8" or 5'6". I have observed the taller a woman is, the less tolerant she is toward shorter men.

Impressing with Personality

If you do really fancy a woman who is taller than you, there is still hope. Remember that women prefer personality to looks. If you have personality you may be able to impress her with it and overcome her natural preference for taller men. You will have to work very hard at it, though as it is likely she will not be as responsive and open to you as she would be to an approach from a taller man. If you have a sense of humor she can relate to or some other personality traits she cannot resist, you still have a chance. You had better be quick, because if your fantastic personality doesn't come to the fore quickly, you'll find she'll soon tire of you and begin to look elsewhere. There are exceptions to the rule that single women prefer men the same height as them or taller, but nine times out of ten you will find single women in the company of men who are taller than them. My ex-wife is an example of this as she is 5'8" and I am 5'6". Height had nothing to do with our relationship, either in the courting or separating stages, but I find this is the exception rather than the rule.

Tests

To prove to yourself height is important, there are two easy tests you can conduct. First, ask women friends at work or within your family of all the men they have dated and/or married, how many have been shorter than them. Invariably, they will say very few, if any. Second, go to shopping centers or just walk down the street and look at people who are obviously couples and observe who is the taller in the relationship. In most cases, the boyfriend or husband will be the taller.

Conclusion

So remember that height is important to single women. You can be mildly overweight or have no hair and have a better chance with a shorter woman than any shorter guy has with a taller woman. Don't waste your time reaching for what you can't have and stick to the attainable. Lastly, don't go around complaining about your height. It is not you that has a problem with your height. It is women who have a "thing" about height. It may be a subconscious thing to women, but in many cases it is a major concern anyway. What you need to do is turning that women's "thing" into your favor. The best way to do it is to concentrate only on single women who find your height acceptable.

You should decide on the best choice and mark the corresponding letter on Answer Sheet 2 with a single line through the centre.*

Passage One

Questions 57 to 61 are based on the following passage.

From the health point of view we are living in a marvelous age. We are immunized from birth against many of the most dangerous diseases. A large number of once fatal illnesses can now be cured by modern drugs and surgery. It is almost certain that one day remedies will be found for the most stubborn remaining disease. The expectation of life has increased enormously. But though the possibility of living a long and happy life is greater than ever before, every day we witness the incredible slaughter of men, women and children on the roads. Man versus the motor-car! It is a never-ending battle which man is losing. Thousands of people the world over are killed or horribly injured each year and we are quietly sitting back and letting it happen.

It has been rightly said that when a man is sitting behind a steering wheel, his car becomes the extension of his personality. There is no doubt that the motor-car often brings out a man's very worst qualities. People who are normally quiet and pleasant may become unrecognizable when they are behind a steering-wheel. They swear, they are ill-mannered and aggressive, willful as two-year-olds and utterly selfish. All their hidden frustrations, disappointments and jealousies seem to be brought to the surface by the act of driving.

The surprising thing is that society smiles so mildly on the motorist and seems to forgive his behavior. Everything is done for his convenience. Cities are allowed to become almost uninhabitable because of heavy traffic; towns are made ugly by huge car parks; the countryside is desecrated (玷污) by road networks; and the mass annual slaughter becomes nothing more than a statistic, to be conveniently forgotten.

With regard to driving, the laws of some countries are notoriously lax and even the strictest are not strict enough. The driving test should be standardized and made far more difficult than it is all drivers should be made to take a test every three years or so; the age at which young people are allowed to drive any vehicle should be raised to at least 21; all vehicles should be put through strict annual tests for safety. Even the smallest amount of alcohol in the blood can weaken a person's driving ability.

Present drinking and driving laws (where they exist) should be made much stricter. Maximum and minimum speed limits should be imposed on all roads. These measures may sound extremely harsh, but surely nothing should be considered as too severe if it results in reducing the annual toll of human life. After all, the world is for human beings, not motor-cars.

Passage Two

Questions 62 to 66 are based on the following passage.

Dr. Thomas Starzl, like all the pioneers of organ transplant, had to learn to live with failure. When he performed the world's first liver transplant 25 years ago, the patient, a three-year-old boy, died on the operating table. The next four patients did not live long enough to get out of the hospital. But more determined than discouraged, Starzl and his colleagues went back to their lab at the University of Colorado Medical School. They devised techniques to reduce the heavy bleeding during surgery, and they worked on better ways to prevent the recipient's immune system from rejecting the organ — an ever-present risk. Now, thanks to further refinements, about two thirds of all liver-transplant patients are living more than a year.

But the triumphs of the transplant surgeons have created yet another tragic problem: a severe shortage of donor organs. “As the results get better, more people go on the waiting lists and there is a wider disparity (差异) between supply and need,” says one doctor. The American Council on Transplantation estimates that on any given day 15,000 Americans are waiting for organs. There is no shortage of actual organs; each year about 25,000 healthy people die unexpectedly in the United States, usually in accidents. The problem is that fewer than 20% become donors.

This trend persists despite laws designed to encourage organ recycling. Under the federal Anatomical Gift Act, a person can authorize the use of his organs after death by signing a statement. Legally, the next of kin can veto these posthumous (死后的) gifts, but surveys indicate that 70% to 80% of the public would not interfere with a family member's decision. The bigger roadblock, according to some experts, is that physicians do not ask for donations, either because they fear offending grieving survivors or because they still regard some transplant procedures as experimental.

When there are not enough organs to go around, distributing the available ones becomes a matter of deciding who will live and who will die. Once donors and potential recipients have been matched for body size and blood type, the sickest patients usually go to the local waiting list. Beyond the seriousness of the patient's condition, doctors base their choice on such criteria as the length of time the patient has been waiting, and how long it will take to obtain an organ and whether the transplant team can gear up in time.
