Certainly, there are some differences between British English and American English. There are a few differences in grammar. For example, speakers of British English say “in hospital” and “Do you have a pen?”, while speakers of American English say “in the hospital” and “Have you got a pen?” Pronunciation is sometimes different. American usually sounds /r/ in words like “car” and “farm”. Some speakers of British English do not sound “r” in these words. There are differences between British English and American English in spelling and vocabulary. For example, “colour” and “honour” are British English spellings, “color” and “honor” are American English spellings.

These differences in grammar, pronunciation, spelling and vocabulary, however, are not important. For the most part, British English and American English are the same language.

Sense of Touch

Touching

Touch is very important to us. It helps us collect information about things around us. When we touch something we know if it is hard like a stone, soft like cotton wool, rough like the bark of a tree or sharp like a pin.

Keeping us safe

We know through touch when things are hot and cold. If something is very hot, a message is sent to your brain to pull your hand away quickly so that you won't get burnt.

Blind people

Touch is very important to blind people because they can't see. They rely on touching things to find out what they are. Blind people read by running their fingers over a page and feeling little lumps (凸起) that spell out the words.
