Buying a house is always a problem, as I've found out several times. There was the one which looked 16, but they were going to build a motorway through the back garden. Another one I went to look at was 17 but was on the point of 18. "Needing some restoration (修复)," said the estate agent.

Then, when you are inspecting one of the possibilities on your rapidly 19 list, you have to keep a 20 expression on your face as the proud 21 tells you how many hundreds of pounds he has 22 the hideous decorations (装修), which you'd 23 at the first opportunity. What about the neighbors? They're always perfect, the most marvelous people you could imagine. But wait till you move in that's 24 you find out about the all night parties twice a week, 25 they never invite you, or the not very well house trained Alsatian (阿尔萨斯狼犬), which they let 26 in the garden every evening to howl (吼叫) at the moon.

Even if you can find a place you want to buy, you still have to 27 the money for it. Unless you've 28 the football pools (赌注), you can forget about paying cash; it's a mortgage (抵押) for you, £4000 down and £75 a month for the rest of your 29, if you can find a building society which will trust you enough to 30 you the money. Of course, the house isn't yours; 31 you can't keep up the repayments, the building society can 32 from you.

In the end, though, what's the alternative? Renting a house is 33, except for those well on the way to becoming millionaires, and to get a house from the council (评议会) you have to put your name down on a waiting list ten years 34.

No, I'll just have to laugh and 35 it, and answer this will be the last time I move—until the next time.

Computer hackers have now got their hands on mobile phones.

A phone virus programme can 16 your phone do things you have no control over, computer security experts 17.

It might 18 the White House or the police, or forward your personal address book to a marketing company. Or it could simply eat into the phone's operating software, turning it 19 and erasing your personal information.

Similar viruses have already made mobile phone owners 20 in Japan and Europe. Ari Hypponen, chief technical officer of a computer security company in Finland, said a virus "can get your 21 and send them elsewhere. And it can record your 22."

Mobiles are now able to surf the Net, send emails and 23 software. So they are an easy 24 for the same hackers who have sent viruses to computers over the past decade.

"It's technically 25 now," said Stephen Trilling, director of research at anti-virus 26 maker Symantec Corp based in the US.

"If the phone is connected to the 27, it can be used to transmit threats and 28 targets, just as any computer can."

In Japan, if you opened a certain email message 29 your mobile, it would cause the phone to repeatedly 30 the national emergency number.

So phone operators had to 31 emergency calls until the 32 was removed.

In Europe, mobiles' short message service, 33 SMS, has been used to send codes that could damage phones.

Mobile users can 34 viruses, of course, by sticking to their traditional phones 35 Web links, some experts said.
