Listening Comprehension

(20 minutes)

Section A

Directions: In this section, you will hear 10 short conversations. At the end of each conversation, a question will be asked about what was said. Both the conversation and the question will be spoken only once. After each question there will be a pause. During the pause, you must read the four choices marked A, B, C and D, and decide which is the best answer. Example: You will hear:

Part I

Reading Comprehension

(35 minutes)

Directions: There are 4 passages in this part. Each passage is followed by some questions or unfinished statements. For each of them there are four choices marked A), B), C) and D). You should decide on the best choice and mark the corresponding letter on the Answer Sheet with a single line through the centre.

Passage One

Questions 11 to 15 are based on the following passage:

Sex refers to the biological differences between males and females, especially the visible differences in the sexual organs and the related differences in the role each sex plays in the reproductive process. Gender refers to the social classification of masculine and feminine. Every society recognizes the sexual division of the species into male and female, but cultures differ in terms of what they consider masculine and feminine. However, some male/female differences in behavior appear to be quite widespread. For example, males have been observed in various cultures to be more likely to initiate (发起) activity. Females have been observed to be more altruistic, that is, more helpful to others, than males. Again, however, we must be careful about assuming that most of these qualities typically associated with either men or women are "natural," that is, biologically based and universal. In

- D) To a cafeteria.
- B) She completely agrees with the man.
- D) She will stay in the hotel.
- B) He is not angry.

- B) Some Christmas presents.
- D) A present for his 25th birthday.

- D) Husband and wife.
- B) Opposite the laboratory.
- D) On the left side of the corridor.

American culture, for example, it is assumed that men are more "naturally" objective than women, that they can look at problems logically, without emotions distorting their views. Thus, it is argued, men are natural sex to be scientists, lawyers, or historians, because they are comfortable dealing with "facts," with "objective reality." On the other hand, women in the United States are frequently perceived of as "naturally" subjective, emotional, and illogical, relying on their feelings to solve the problems and handle difficulties in the "real world," as they supposedly do their "natural" sphere of the home. Women are considered "naturally" vain about their appearance and "naturally" possessed with a maternal instinct, the inclination to nurture and protect children. In fact, there is nothing at all natural and universal about these stereotyped (固定模式的), sex-linked characteristics. They are, as are so many other deeply ingrained traits, the product of a specific cultural upbringing.

Passage Two

UAL (United Air Liners) last week announced plans to acquire U.S. Airways, the sixth-largest U.S. carrier, for $4.3billion. Analysts have said the move could prompt a wave of combination in the U.S. airline industry and leave American Airlines facing strategic problems, which is generally considered the second largest airline in the world after United Air Liners.

"I like to say that there are lots of different potential avenues we could take, given the range of interested parties. And it is fair to say that we are very, very actively engaged with lots of different parties on all fronts," Vice President for Europe Jeff Campbell said. He warned that steps in response to the proposed UAL-U. S. Airways deal might not be immediate. "This is a battle, and a set of developments in the industry, that will take a very long time to finish playing out because of the complexity of all the issues and all the various sides that have very strong feelings about what the outcome should be," he said.

American Airlines has said that a large group of supporters were monitoring the UAL-U.S. Airways deal with interest, such as labor unions, regulatory bodies, elected officials as well as customers. Passage Three

Questions 21 to 25 are based on the following passage:

Over the past fifteen years, information technology (IT) has become an essential part of the managerial vocabulary for a great many businesses. Today, however, telecommunications are rapidly becoming as important as the computer industry. This can be attributed to the liberalization of world markets, which has created an explosion in the development and availability of advanced communications services.

In many instances, communications systems are being used to enable companies to implement new strategies. One such strategy is the move towards more globalized business. Obviously, setting up an office overseas is not simply a matter of identifying potential markets. Logistics (后數), such as establishing links for the vital flows of information between a company's head office and its overseas subsidiaries and suppliers, are equally important. Not surprisingly, sophisticated communications systems play a fundamental role in connecting business operations.

One such system is the Integrated Digital Services Network (ISDN), which enables companies to send and receive high speed data, fax transmissions and ordinary voice calls, as well as images for video-conferences, over international digital telephone networks. The network also enables businesses to offer their services on a worldwide scale. One such offering is the new International Dealerlink. This is a voice — only, private circuit service jointly offered by British Telecom and France Telecom. It can meet the special communications needs of the fine providing a fast and cost-effective link between the two financial centers. The horizon the UK and the Netherlands at the end of January.

Passage Four

Questions 26 to 30 are based on the following passage:

We have presented enough evidence to show that the provision of television is the major leisure provision in Australia. Is it, however, a sad commentary upon the Australian way of life that this form of leisure is so popular?

What is often forgotten by commentators who criticize the extent and nature of television viewing is the depth of demands made upon adults in the daily routine of living. Although Australians have not been passionate (热情的) devotees to the work ethic (道德规范), a significant number of Australians are increasingly spending long hours, and the bulk of their energies, on the job and/or management of a household. As the complexity of Australia expands, more individuals (executives, businessmen, salesmen, public servants, politicians, and academics) devote the major part of their energies to very demanding work. Not only that, but parents bringing up children and managing a household find that these demands burn up most of their available energy. Participation in voluntary organizations often places additional demands upon adults.

It is not surprising then that large proportions of the adult population need undemanding, evening relaxation — a time to wind down from the rigours imposed by the work and domestic world. The stress imposed upon individuals as a result of the accelerating pace of living is just beginning to be recognized as structural properties of the industrial world rather than individual incapacity. Jones (1982) for instance refers to the vast increase in stress-induced diseases such as mental breakdowns, suicide, alcoholism and obesity.

Heavy work and domestic responsibility create a need for replacing experiences that television brings so adequately, conveniently and cheaply. Perhaps it is difficult to conceive of a means to relax people so efficiently as does television.

- 26. It can be inferred from the passage that _____.
