

THE MAKING OF TEXTUAL CULTURE

'Grammatica' and Literary Theory
350-1100

MARTIN IRVINE

The Making of Textual Culture

'Grammatica' and Literary Theory, 350-1100

MARTIN IRVINE

Georgetown University

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
Cambridge, New York, Melbourne, Madrid, Cape Town, Singapore, São Paulo

Cambridge University Press
The Edinburgh Building, Cambridge CB2 2RU, UK

Published in the United States of America by Cambridge University Press, New York

www.cambridge.org
Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521414470

© Cambridge University Press 1994

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 1994
This digitally printed first paperback version 2006

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloguing in Publication data

Irvine, Martin.

The Making of Textual Culture: 'Grammatica' and Literary Theory, 350–1100 / Martin Irvine.

p. cm. – (Cambridge studies in medieval literature: 19)

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 0 521 41447 4

1. Literature, Medieval – History and criticism – Theory, etc.

2. Latin literature – History and criticism – Theory, etc.

3. Literature, Medieval – Criticism, Textual.

4. Latin literature – Criticism, Textual. 5. Transmission of texts.

I. Title. II. Series.

PN671.168 1994

809'.02–dc20 93-19603 CIP

ISBN-13 978-0-521-41447-0 hardback

ISBN-10 0-521-41447-4 hardback

ISBN-13 978-0-521-03199-8 paperback

ISBN-10 0-521-03199-0 paperback

Preface

Grammatica is the science of interpreting the poets and other writers and the systematic principles for speaking and writing correctly; it is the source and foundation of the liberal arts.

– Glosses on grammatica, ninth–eleventh centuries

When I first began the research for this book, I thought that I would write an account of the literary aspects of medieval grammatica comparable to recent studies of the history of rhetoric, logic, and the liberal arts. But the more I investigated the sources, especially the manuscripts associated with the grammatical curriculum and grammatical methodology, the more I became convinced that the subject demanded a different approach. I began the study anew, considering the role of grammatica in forming the textual culture of the eighth through twelfth centuries.

Two discoveries shaped the way I approached this study. First, I found that manuscripts associated with grammatica – both curriculum authors and artes grammaticae – form quite possibly the largest part of the archival record of the medieval West after biblical, theological, and liturgical texts. I did not expect to find so much; 800 or so manuscripts later, I felt like an archaeologist who had stumbled upon a large but uninvestigated layer in a well-known dig. And second, it became clear to me that grammatica always had important social functions and was never conceived or practiced apart from its larger cultural work. Read in a historical and ideological context, the formal definitions and concepts that can be recovered from artes grammaticae and other treatises become statements in a more far-reaching social practice, statements that cannot be understood apart from the system of discourse in which they were embedded. I found that grammatica can be understood not so much as the name for a distinct and self-circumscribed ars or disciplina but as the central node in a larger network, the gravitational center of several other institutions and practices – schools, libraries, scriptoria, commentaries, canonical texts and language.

I also discovered that rather than maintaining and promoting literacy in some kind of neutral or universal sense – that is, literacy as a form of practical knowledge taken to be basically the same wherever and whenever it appears in culture – grammatica was responsible for producing a special kind of literacy, the effects of which we continue to experience in Western societies to the present day. Investigating grammatica in the full range of its cultural effects opened up a whole new way to understand medieval textual culture and, consequently, the textual culture of the Western world.

Preface

Grammatica thus had a status unlike the other medieval arts and sciences since it functioned as the only point of access to all of the orders of textual knowledge. Rather than one discipline among many, grammatica had an essentially constitutive function, making a certain kind of literacy and literary culture possible per se. Both the textual objects defined or constructed through grammatical discourse and the social relations enacted and replicated through the institutional practice of the discipline are inscribed everywhere in medieval culture. As a culture of The Writings (scriptura) and canonical texts both Christian and classical (the auctores), medieval culture was fundamentally textual and therefore fundamentally |grammatical in the medieval sense of the term. This book is an attempt to describe the larger cultural work performed by grammatica in its varied functions.

The historical boundaries of my study are roughly from the middle of the fourth century, when imperial Roman grammatica took on its final codification, to around 1100, the era before the rise of the twelfth-century schools. I consider the development of grammatica in late antiquity and describe the textual communities that emerged from grammatical culture, with a special emphasis on Anglo-Saxon and Carolingian literary culture. A final chapter is devoted to grammatical culture in Anglo-Saxon England and the implications of grammatica for the study of Old English literature.

This book is the first part of a projected two-volume study of grammatica and medieval textual culture. In a future study I will continue the argument developed here to investigate the implications of grammatica for twelfth- to fourteenth-century literary culture.

A note on sources and quotations

Since the primary sources of medieval grammatical theory are not well known, I have included full quotations from many of the central texts. When the precise wording of a text is important for my argument, I have cited the text in the original and have supplied a translation. In other cases, I have simply provided a translation with a reference to the edition or manuscript source from which it was taken. Translations throughout are my own.

Acknowledgements

I am indebted to many friends and colleagues for their support, assistance, and encouragement throughout the course of this project. I owe a special debt of gratitude to the late Morton Bloomfield, who supported and encouraged my early investigations into grammatica and medieval literary theory, and to Herbert Bloch, who provided important direction and support in the early phases of my research. William Alfred and Larry Benson have given support and encouragement over many years. I am grateful to Paul Meyvaert, who introduced me to paleography and codicology and who provided many hours of collegial conversation on Bede and medieval Latin. David Staines, Jan Ziolkowski, David Howlett, Michael Lapidge, Katherine O'Brien O'Keeffe, Mark Amsler, Rita Copeland, Winthrop Wetherbee, Seth Lerer, and Penn Szittyá have read parts of this study at various stages of its progress and have offered helpful suggestions and comments. The late O. B. Hardison, Jr. and the late Judson Allen generously shared their learning and offered support at important stages of my research. Thanks must also go to Alastair Minnis for his editorial assistance and support of my project and to Vivian Law for her generous responses to queries about manuscripts and grammatical texts. Allen Frantzen's friendship and critical insight have been a valuable resource throughout the final stages of this project.

Parts of chapter 6 appeared in a different form in Semiotica 63 1/2 (1987) and a part of chapter 7 in Anglo-Saxon England 15 (1986). Some sections of chapter 9 appeared in Style 20 (1986) and in Allen J. Frantzen, ed., Speaking Two Languages: Traditional Disciplines and Contemporary Theory in Medieval Studies (Albany: SUNY Press, 1991). I want to thank the respective publishers for permission to use parts of these articles here.

Thanks must also go to the following libraries for extending research courtesies: the Hill Monastic Manuscript Library, St. John's University; the British Library; the Bodleian Library; Cambridge University Library; Trinity College Library, Cambridge; the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris; the Burgerbibliothek, Bern; the Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Munich; the Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, Vatican

Acknowledgements

City; the Stiftsbibliothek, Einsiedeln. I would also like to thank the following institutions for their kind permission to reproduce the plates in this book: the British Library; the Bodleian Library; the Cambridge University Library; Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; the Bibliothèque Nationale; the Bibliothèque municipale, Orléans; the Burgerbibliothek, Bern.

For research and fellowship support, I am grateful to the National Endowment for the Humanities, Wayne State University, and Georgetown University. I am also grateful for publication support from the National Endowment for the Humanities and Georgetown University.

Abbreviations

Arts Libéraux	Arts libéraux et philosophie au moyen âge. Actes du Quatrième Congrès International de Philosophie Médiévale. Montreal: Institut d'Études Médiévales, and Paris: J. Vrin, 1969.
ASPR	Anglo-Saxon Poetic Records. Ed. G. P. Krapp and E. V. K. Dobbie. 6 vols. New York: Columbia University Press, 1931-42.
Barwick	Karl Barwick, Remmius Palaemon und die römische Ars Grammatica , Philologus 161, 15 (Leipzig, 1922).
BL	British Library, London
BM	Bibliothèque municipale
BN	Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris
Bonner	Stanley Bonner, Education in Ancient Rome from the Elder Cato to the Younger Pliny. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1977.
CCCM	Corpus Christianorum, Continuatio Mediaevalis. Turnhout: Brepols, 1966- .
CCSL	Corpus Christianorum Series Latina. Turnhout: Brepols, 1953- .
CLA	Codices Latini Antiquiores. Ed. E. A. Lowe. 12 vols. Oxford, 1934-71.
CSEL	Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum. Vienna and Leipzig, 1866- .
CUL	Cambridge University Library
Curtius	E. R. Curtius, European Literature and the Latin Middle Ages. Trans. Willard Trask. New York: Pantheon, 1953.
GCS	Die Griechischen Christlichen Schriftsteller der Ersten Jahrhunderte. Leipzig: J. C. Hinrichs, 1897- .
GG	Grammatici Graeci. Leipzig: Teubner, 1878-1910.
GL	Grammatici Latini. 7 vols. Ed. Heinrich Keil. Vol. 8 ed. H. Hagen. Leipzig: Teubner, 1857-80.

List of abbreviations

- GRF Grammaticae Romae Fragmenta. Ed. H. Funaioli. Leipzig, 1907.
- Holtz Louis Holtz, Donat et la tradition de l'enseignement grammatical. Paris: CNRS, 1981.
- Kaster Robert A. Kaster, Guardians of Language: The Grammarian and Society in Late Antiquity. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1988.
- Laistner M. L. W. Laistner, Thought and Letters in Western Europe, A.D. 500 to 900. 2nd edn Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1957.
- Law Vivien Law, The Insular Latin Grammarians. Woodbridge, Suffolk: Boydell and Brewer, 1982.
- Manitius Max Manitius, Geschichte der lateinischen Literatur des Mittelalters. 3 vols. Munich: C. H. Beck'sche Verlagsbuchhandlung, 1911-31.
- Marrou, Education H.-I. Marrou, A History of Education in Antiquity. Trans. G. Lamb. London: Sheed and Ward, 1956.
- Marrou, Augustin Saint Augustin et la fin de la culture antique. 4th edn with Retractio. Paris: Boccard, 1958.
- MGH Monumenta Germaniae Historica. Hannover and Leipzig, 1826- .
- AA Auctores Antiquissimi
- Epist. Epistolae
- Cap. Capitularia
- Poet. Poetae
- SS Scriptores
- SRG Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in usum scholarum separatim editi
- Pfeiffer Rudolf Pfeiffer, History of Classical Scholarship from the Beginnings to the End of the Hellenistic Age. Oxford: Clarendon, Press, 1968.
- PG Patrologia Graeca. Ed. J. P. Migne. Paris: J. P. Migne, 1857-86.
- PL Patrologia Latina. Ed. J. P. Migne. Paris: J. P. Migne, 1844-55.
- Riché Pierre Riché, Education and Culture in the Barbarian West from the Sixth through the Eighth Century. Trans. John Contreni. Columbia, S.C: University of South Carolina Press, 1976.
- RG Rhetores Graeci. Ed. Leonard Spengel. 3 vols. Leipzig: Teubner, 1885-61.

List of abbreviations

RLM	Rhetores Latini Minores . Ed. Karl Halm. Leipzig: Teubner, 1863.
Roger	Maurice Roger, L'enseignement des lettres classiques d'Ausone à Alcuin . Paris: Picard, 1905; repr. Hildesheim: Olms, 1968.
Sandys	J. E. Sandys, A History of Classical Scholarship . 3rd edn vol. 1. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1920.
SVF	Stoicorum Veterum Fragmenta . 3 vols. Ed. J. Von Arnim. Leipzig 1905–24.

Contents

List of illustrations	page x
Preface	xiii
Acknowledgements	xv
Abbreviations	xvii
Grammatica: A historical and methodological introduction	I
1 The formation of grammatica within classical discursive practices	23
1.1 Plato the grammatikos : metalanguage, the problem of authority, and the control of textual culture	25
1.2 Aristotle: the system of discursive objects	30
1.3 The Stoics and the formation of grammatike	34
1.4 The institution of a model: hellenistic foundations	39
2 The developing model of grammatica in the Roman and early medieval world	49
2.1 The development of the Roman model	50
2.2 The late Roman artes grammaticae : form, contents, and medieval reception	56
2.3 The early medieval model of grammatica : methodology and the objects of discourse	63
2.4 Methodology for reading: accent, vocalizing, punctuating, oral delivery	68
2.5 Emendatio, orthographia, latinitas : authority, correctness, and canonicity	74
2.6 Grammatica and ideology in the Empire and early Middle Ages: case studies	78
3 Linguistic foundations	88
3.1 De voce : on scriptible speech and writing	91
3.2 De littera : on letters and writing	97
3.3 De tropis : theories of metaphor and figurative language	104
3.4 The textuality of the artes grammaticae : metalanguage and literary object language	107

Contents

4	Enarratio I: Commentaries on Vergil from Donatus to Fulgentius	118
4.1	Donatus and the grammatical accessus topics	121
4.2	Servius: A model for enarratio	126
4.3	Macrobius	142
4.4	Christian allegory and Vergil's Eclogues : Philargyrius and the Scholia Bernensia	148
4.5	Fulgentius	155
4.6	The commentaries and the developing literary canon	160
5	Grammatica and the formation of medieval textual communities: Alexandria to Isidore of Seville	162
5.1	Clement of Alexandria and Origen: the making of Christian grammatike	164
5.2	Augustine: the medieval model of grammatica	169
5.3	Grammatica and the monastic textual community: the Benedictine Rule and Gregory the Great	189
5.4	Cassiodorus and the ideological role of grammatica	195
5.5	Isidore of Seville: grammatica , the encyclopedia, and literary theory	209
6	Enarratio II: interpretation and the grammar of allegory	244
6.1	Allegory and the textuality of commentary	244
6.2	Grammatica and the grammar of allegory	247
6.3	Clement of Alexandria and exegetical semiotics	250
6.4	Origen: tropology and the master discourse of the Eternal Gospel	252
6.5	Augustine's grammar of allegory	257
6.6	The primary codes: allegory and typology	262
6.7	Origen, Augustine, and semiotic anxiety	265
7	Grammatica and textual culture in Anglo-Saxon England and Carolingian Europe	272
7.1	Bede and the scope of grammatica in the eighth century	272
7.2	Preface to the Carolingian Renaissance: Boniface, grammatica , and authority	298
7.3	Carolingian Renaissance and the power of grammatica	305
7.4	Alcuin and Carolingian grammatica	313
8	The genres of grammatical culture and manuscript textuality	334
8.1	Grammatica in the library	334
8.2	The form and contents of grammatical manuscripts: compilations of artes and auctores	344

Contents

8.3	The textuality of the biblical epic poems and some conclusions	364
8.4	The semiology of the page and the layout of glosses	371
8.5	Handlist of compilations of artes and auctores : c. 700–c. 1100	393
9	The implications of grammatical culture in Anglo-Saxon England	405
9.1	Grammatica in ninth- and tenth-century England	406
9.2	The king who writes: King Alfred and a new grammatica	415
9.3	Hybrid textuality: writing in Anglo-Saxon England	420
9.4	Textual archaeology: lexicon, gloss, compilation, library, encyclopedia	425
9.5	Cædmon as glossator: the illiteratus in the monastic textual community	431
9.6	King Alfred and compilatio	435
9.7	Reading like a grammaticus : glossing and intertextuality in The Dream of the Rood and Elene	437
9.8	The Old English Daniel : reading, glossing, compiling	449
9.9	Brunanburh and the Chronicle poems: textualization, ideology, nostalgia	451
10	Conclusion	461
	Notes	467
	Bibliography	553
	Indexes	599
	1. Names and titles	599
	2. General	602
	3. Manuscripts cited	604

Illustrations

- 1 Boethius, De consolatione philosophiae with Remigian gloss. 18 Cambridge University Library, Kk.3.21, f.85r. (With permission of the Cambridge University Library.)
- 2 Servius, Commentary on Vergil's Aeneid 1 (lemmata format). 127 British Library, Harley 2782, f.29r. (With permission of the British Library.)
- 3 Servius, Commentary on Vergil's Aeneid 2 (text and gloss format). 128
Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale, lat. 16236, f.79r. (With permission of the Bibliothèque Nationale.)
- 4 Arator, De actibus apostolorum with glosses. Cambridge Univer- 359 sity Library, Gg.5.35 f.86r (With permission of the Cambridge University Library.)
- 5 Aldhelm's Enigmata with glosses. British Library, Royal 12.C.23, 363
f.83r. (With permission of the British Library.)
- 6 Arator, De actibus apostolorum with glosses. Paris, Bibliothèque 365
Nationale, lat. 2773, f.35v. (With permission of the Bibliothèque Nationale.)
- 7 Juvenius, Evangeliorum libri quattuor with Latin, Welsh, and 373
Old Irish glosses. Cambridge University Library, Ff.4.42, f.6r.
(With permission of the Cambridge University Library.)
- 8 Donatus, Ars grammatica (Ars maior) with glosses. Oxford, 374 Bodleian Library, Auct. T.2.20, f.26r. (With permission of the Bodleian Library.)
- 9 Priscian, Institutiones grammaticae with glosses. Paris, Biblio- 375 thèque Nationale, lat. 7501, f.2r. (With permission of the Bibliothèque Nationale.)
- 10 Priscian, Partitiones with glosses. Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale, 376
lat. 13023, f.5r. (With permission of the Bibliothèque Nationale.)
- 11 Opening page of Donatus's Ars grammatica (Ars minor) with 377 decorated initial P (of 'Partes orationis'), which begins a compilation of grammatical artes and poetry. Bern, Burgerbibliothek 207, f.2v. (With permission of the Burgerbibliothek, Bern.)

List of illustrations

- 12 Incipit page of the preceding compilation, incorporating highly stylized and decorated display script, runic script, and glosses. Bern, Burgerbibliothek 207, f.2r. (With permission of the Burgerbibliothek, Bern.) 378
- 13 Opening page of Donatus's Ars grammatica (Ars minor) which begins a compilation of grammatical artes and poetry. Orléans, Bibliothèque municipale 295, p. 1. (With permission of the Bibliothèque municipale, Orléans.) 379
- 14 Prudentius, Psychomachia with glosses. Oxford, Bodleian Library, Auct. F.3.6, f.109v. (With permission of the Bodleian Library.) 380
- 15 Bern, Burgerbibliothek 167, f.7r. Vergil, Aeneid with Servius's commentary as gloss. (With permission of the Burgerbibliothek, Bern.) 381
- 16 Boethius, De consolazione philosophiae with Remigian gloss. Oxford, Bodleian Library, Auct. F.1.15, f.5r. (With the permission of the Bodleian Library.) 382
- 17 Vergil, Aeneid with Servius's commentary as marginal gloss. Oxford, Bodleian Library, Canon. class lat. 50, f.123r. (With permission of the Bodleian Library.) 386
- 18 Vergil, Aeneid with Servius's commentary in outer column as gloss. Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale, lat. 10307, f.100r. (With permission of the Bibliothèque Nationale.) 387
- 19 Vergil, Aeneid with Servius's commentary as framing gloss. Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale, Nouv. acq. lat. 2059, f.2r. (With permission of the Bibliothèque Nationale.) 388
- 20 Line drawing of Christ as Wisdom, with Dunstan kneeling. Includes two lines of hexameter verse, most likely by Dunstan. Oxford, Bodleian Library, Auct. F.4.32, f.1r. (With permission of the Bodleian Library.) 408
- 21 Opening page of Ovid's Ars amatoria with syntax marks and interlinear glosses in a quire that was completed by Dunstan. Oxford, Bodleian Library, Auct. F.4.32, f.37r. (With permission of the Bodleian Library.) 410
- 22 The Anglo-Saxon Chronicle (MS A), with the opening of The Battle of Brunanburh. Cambridge, Corpus Christi College 173, f.26r. (With permission of the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College.) 455

Grammatica: a historical and methodological introduction

Litteras disce.

Disticha Catonis

For over 1,200 years, textual culture in Western Europe was governed by grammatica, the first of the liberal arts, which was known as “the art [or science] of interpreting the poets and other writers and the principles for speaking and writing correctly.”¹ But the social effects of grammatica were different in kind and degree from other arts and disciplines: grammatica was foundational, a social practice that provided the exclusive access to literacy, the understanding of Scripture, the knowledge of a literary canon, and membership in an international Latin textual community. The centrality of grammatica throughout la longue durée of the late classical to early Renaissance era is itself an astonishing fact of Western culture. Although the role of grammatica in the medieval model of the liberal arts is widely recognized,² the larger cultural work performed by this discipline – its social, intellectual, and ideological function – has yet to be recovered. This book is an attempt to describe the larger function of grammatica in early medieval literary culture.

Rather than approaching the history of grammatica simply as a history of theories, educational practices, or the doctrines of a discipline, I intend to disclose the broad social effects of the discipline and to recover the social and intellectual agenda that lies behind the often bewildering mass of sources – from individual treatises and commentaries to entire compiled manuscripts – that document grammatical methodology. This study, therefore, is an attempt to define what I call grammatical culture, the kind of literate and literary culture sustained and reproduced by grammatica, considered not only as a discipline with a circumscribed body of knowledge but as a model for textual culture with implications that extend far beyond the apparent objective contents of a discipline.

As the foundation of a series of disciplines, grammatica instituted a model of learning, interpretation, and knowledge that defined various regional textual communities and provided the discursive and textual competencies that were preconditions for participation in literary culture throughout medieval Europe. Grammatical discourse constituted a special field of knowledge – a canon of traditional texts, both Christian and classical (the auctores), and a normative written or textual Latin (latinitas), the structure and style of which was reduced to systematic description and instruction (ars). Grammatica, a Latinized Greek term, was also called litteratura, the discipline of the written, and one who was grammatically educated was a litteratus, competent in reading and interpreting Latin writings.³ As a discipline sustained by the dominant social and political institutions of medieval Europe, grammatica functioned to perpetuate and reproduce the most fundamental conditions for textual culture, providing the discursive rules and interpretive strategies that constructed certain texts as repositories of authority and value. In its foundational role, grammatica also created a special kind of literate subjectivity, an identity and social position for litterati which was consistently gendered as masculine and socially empowered.

Introduction

Although grammatica was formalized as the first of the arts of discourse in early medieval school curricula, the discipline articulated cultural practices that extended far beyond scholastic institutions and the internal unity of the arts of discourse: by supplying the very conditions for textual culture, the culture of the manuscript book, grammatica functioned as an irreducible cultural prerequisite, a status never given to rhetoric or logic. In the terms of medieval scholars themselves, grammatica was “the source and foundation of liberal letters”⁴ or “the source and foundation of all the textual arts,”⁵ not only because grammatica was the only point of entry into literate culture but because grammatica was universally understood to supply the discursive means for constructing language and texts as objects of knowledge. Grammatica thus had an essential constitutive function, and was not simply one discipline among many, or even the first of many; it made possible a certain kind of literacy, reproducing the conditions for textual culture per se. The constitutive function of grammatical knowledge was thus presupposed throughout the whole system of text-based disciplines – the arts of discourse, biblical exegesis, literary interpretation, philosophy, theology, and law. The broad social effects of grammatica are therefore to be found outside the classroom: grammatica provided the readerly and interpretive skills for the production of literary and textual knowledge across the disciplines.

THE MODEL OF GRAMMATICA IN THE EARLY MIDDLE AGES

Since the history of thought is a history of models – an archive of ways of conceiving and representing a world of objects – we must first con-