THE idea of the present work, the publication of which has been inevitably delayed by the war, was first conceived in 1933. It is designed to cover the same ground, though on a different scale, as the well-known dictionaries by Sir William Smith on Greek and Roman antiquities and on Greek and Roman biography, mythology, and geography. The eighth edition (1914) of Lübker's Reallexikon was taken as a general model, but with certain modifications in principle and with certain differences in emphasis. The present work is intended to be less purely factual than Lübker. It devotes more space to biography and literature, less to geography and to bibliographical information, aiming in this latter respect at no more than referring the reader to the best work, in English and foreign languages, on the various subjects. A special feature is the inclusion of longer articles designed to give a comprehensive survey of the main subjects and to place minor characters, places, and events, the choice of which has been necessarily selective, against their appropriate literary or historical background. The terminus ad quem is, generally speaking, the death of Constantine (337), and proportionately less space has been allotted to persons who lived later than the second century A.D.; but a few prominent figures of later ages, such as Augustine, Eustathius, Photius, Psellus, Thomas Magister, Triclinius, and Tzetzes, who are important for the student of classical antiquity, have been included. Christian writers, as such, have been excluded.

The editors of the dictionary at its inception were Mr. J. D. Denniston, for Greek literature; Professor J. Wight Duff, for Latin literature; Mr. (now Professor) H. M. Last, for Greek and Roman history and geography; Professor A. D. Nock, for Greek and Roman religion; the then Provost of Oriel, Dr. W. D. (now Sir David) Ross, for Greek and Roman philosophy, mathematics, and science. Professor R. G. Collingwood advised on matters concerned with art and archaeology until his death in 1943. In 1937 Professor Last found himself unable to continue his editorship, and his place was taken by Professor M. Cary and Dr. H. H. Scullard, who are alone responsible for the selection and form of articles on history, geography, law, archaeology, and art. In 1944 Professor Wight Duff died, and Professor A. Souter agreed to see the articles on Latin literature through the press; and in 1945 Professor H. J. Rose took over from Professor Nock the final stages of the editorship of articles connected with religion. In the autumn of 1939 Sir Paul Harvey undertook the complicated and laborious task of securing uniformity in such matters as spelling, transliteration, and abbreviations, and of adding the requisite cross-references. He had all but completed this work when in June 1948 illness compelled him to relinquish it. Professor Paul Maas has placed his many-sided learning at the Delegates' disposal in the final stages, and contributed the short bibliographical articles at the end of the book. Valuable help and advice have also been received from Mr. R. Syme and Professor A. Momigliano.

A list of contributors will be found on p. vii. At the end of the book three short bibliographical articles have been included as appendixes, listing the principal works of reference in the field of classical scholarship generally, the history of Greek and Latin literature, and Greek grammar.

Every effort has been made by the editors to incorporate the results of recent scholarship and to bring the work as much up to date as possible, but a task which involved communication with so many widely scattered contributors has been made much harder by the interruptions of war and the difficulties of present production. For any omissions therefore, particularly in the bibliographies, the reader's indulgence is sought.

NOTE TO THE READER

ROMANS have normally been listed under their cognomina rather than nomina. Bearers of the same name have usually been arranged in their chronological order, subject to a priority given to emperors and kings. But it has not been possible to do this in the case of the bearers of the names Dionysius, Julius, and Ptolemaeus; and for these a rough alphabetical order of their places of origin, or of their cognomina, has been adopted. Numerous cross-references have been given for the reader's assistance. Quantities of vowels have been indicated where readers might be in doubt, e.g. ANÝTUS, EURÍPIDES. In the bibliographies place of publication is not mentioned, except in the case of books in English published outside the United Kingdom. The abbreviations employed (a list of which is given on pp. ix–xix) are somewhat fuller than those in Liddell and Scott, Greek-English Lexicon, and in Lewis and Short, Latin Dictionary. In the spelling of Greek and Latin words the rules for transliteration adopted in the Journal of Hellenic Studies have been in general followed; but no attempt has been made to achieve a pedantic uniformity. Where there is an accepted English form of an ancient name, such as Hecuba, Clytemnestra, Phidias, Pisistratus, that form has been used. Similarly, such established forms of common nouns as choregus, didascaliae, palaestra, scolia, strategus have been thus spelt, while the Greek spelling has been retained for less familiar words such as ephetai, hektemoroi, nauarchos. For the names of Greek cities ending in -εια, -eia has normally been adopted; but -ea or -ia has been preferred in the case of some cities, e.g. Chaeronea, Mantinea, Alexandria, which are usually so spelt in English. The Greek final -ων in proper names has normally been transliterated -on, but not in such famous names as Plato and Zeno. The whole subject is one on which scholars differ, and it has been found necessary to impose a measure of uniformity in face of some disagreement. In the cases of I and J, U and V the following rules have been followed in principle; but many exceptions have been made where it seemed convenient. In headings J is normally used as initial letter for proper names, e.g. Janiculum, Jason, Josephus, Julius, Juvenal (but it would be eccentric to spell Iacchus, Iapetus, &c., where metre often demands the I, with a J): I for all other words, e.g. iaculum, iudex, ius, iuvenes. In the body of the articles J is used for names isolated in an English context, also for abbreviations: I for names in a Latin title, phrase, or quotation, and for things. Thus: Jugurtha passim in article on Marius, Juv. for Juvenal, but Bellum Iugurthinum, ius civile, Lex Iulia, De vita Iulii Agricolae. Consonantal U is used in Latin quotations (as opposed to phrases) alone: V everywhere else, including all headings.
