Editor's Note

Needless to say, the Internet has many advantages over a variety of channels to get to know China.

Up till now, there are more than 2,000 governmental websites at various levels in China, in addition to countless websites of other kind. By surfing the rich information on the Net, people can make virtual tours to China, understanding its past and present, general and specific. However, the Net can also easily envelope in a sea of information and misinformation, and the payback often does not deserve the time and efforts spent.

In light of these mentioned above, we have compiled this website compendium, enlisting websites hosted by State organs of the central, provincial, municipal and regional governments, news media, and scientific and cultural departments, as well as major institutions of higher learning. ICP in quality, these websites are categorized in this book as State Organs, Regions, Economy, Society, News Media, Science & Technology, Culture & Tourism, Social institutions, Diplomatic Missions and Portals. In order to have a better understanding of the quality of the websites, we have, apart from listing out the major channels and columns of the websites, provided the names of the hosts. For governmental bodies, we have introduced their functions and services, while for universities and colleges; we have made a general description of their academic specialties and best programs. We hope that these off-line materials can better serve our readers.

It needs special notice here that websites in Hong Kong, Macao and Taiwan are not included in this compendium, and reference time for materials used was June, 2001.

Due to deadline pressures, there are a number of misses in the website list, a regret that will be definitely avoided in our next print or edition.
