INTRODUCTION

This bibliography is designed to provide an extensive listing of Soviet scientific and technical periodicals for the period since World War II and to help fill the lack of information about Soviet institutions and their locations.

The term "serial publication" is interpreted to include all journals and other periodicals, annuals, and monographic series, as well as collections of papers issued irregularly but with continuous numbering.

English translations of entire journals are included. Publications in oriental languages (Armenian, Kirgiz, Tadjhik, etc.) are included only if they have title pages and tables of contents or summaries in Russian.

Publications not devoted exclusively to science and technology but regularly carrying relevant articles are included.

Pamphlets and near-print bulletins published by local branches of national societies, factories, and other agencies, and other publications not reported in national or local bibliographies of the Soviet Union are not included.

All institutions except those attached to Academies of Sciences are listed under the city in which they are located. Distinctive titles are used without the names of the institutions or agencies responsible for publication. Names of "trusts" and societies are given without locations.

"See also" references are used to indicate changes in names of institutions in and titles of periodicals.

The words "Gosudarstvennyi" (state), "ordena" (of the order), and "imeni" (named) are used only when needed to distinguish among similar titles or when they are integral parts of abbreviated titles.

The + sign following a date denotes publications continuing to date. The - sign is used to indicate that a date of first issue or of discontinuation is not known. Brackets around the name of a city indicate that it was not possible to establish the location of the institution in official sources. Holdings of the Library of Congress are ordinarily followed by the LC call number, but the symbol "LC" is used when a publication is not fully cataloged or is classified as a monograph with a different call number for each issue.

The Keyword Index of Institutes provides a list of organizations arranged alphabetically by the most important word in each name.

The Guide to Subject Content is intended to be useful as a means of compiling fairly exhaustive lists of Soviet serial publications on various subjects. It is a supplement to the keyword index, rather than an index to the main text. Properly used, it should serve as a checklist to enable small and medium-sized special libraries to determine their coverage of fields of interest in the Soviet technical literature. Since it is the nature of serial literature that journal titles are broad and general, while the articles within the journals are very specific, the subject categories used here are very broad. Every effort has been made to list each journal title under every appropriate heading.

I wish to express my appreciation to John Sherrod, former Chief of the Science and Technology Division, for his encouragement and advice, and to Marvin McFarland, Acting Chief, for his assistance in determining the English equivalents of Russian titles. The preparation of this publication was greatly assisted by Mrs. Elizabeth Petrov.
