WELCOME TO SSLW 2015

On behalf of the organising committee of SSLW 2015, I am delighted to welcome you to the conference, to Auckland University of Technology (AUT) and to Auckland, Aotearoa New Zealand. This is the 14th conference on second language writing but the first to be hosted by a country 'downunder'. Given the distance of New Zealand to other countries where the conference has been held since 1998, we were a little unsure how popular New Zealand would be for those of our community of L2 writing enthusiasts who may be less accustomed to long-haul travel than we are. The response, however, was amazing; we have registered about 320 delegates from 'the four corners of the globe' and of these, we have close on 250 presenters, including our invited speakers. To some extent, we attribute this response to the focus of the conference theme.

The theme, Learning to write for academic purposes: Advancing theory, research and practice, was chosen in response to a number of requests and recommendations from members of the SSLW community. It focuses on advancing our knowledge and understanding of what is involved in learning to write for the many and varied academic purposes that L2 writers encounter while studying in educational settings and working in various professions and workplaces. The particular academic purposes can vary according to the contexts and settings in which such writing is undertaken. In educational contexts, issues associated with learning to write for academic purposes can be viewed from both the L2 learners' and teachers' perspectives. In workplace contexts, they can be seen from both the L2 writers' and other stakeholders' perspectives.

Leading our thinking and discussions on the theme are thirteen invited speakers. Paul Kei Matsuda, Rosa Manchón and Ken Hyland will offer keynote addresses that draw our attention to ways in which the theory, research and practice of learning to write for academic purposes can be advanced. In addition, our ten 30-minute plenary speakers from diverse backgrounds and with varied research and publication interests in L2 writing will offer addresses that focus specifically on practice-based 'issues' associated with learning to write for academic purposes in contexts and settings they are familiar with. While many of our parallel session presenters will also address aspects of the theme, others will offer sessions on a wider range of L2 writing interests.

Opportunities for discussion and networking will of course be an important part of our learning experience during the conference. We hope that the catered morning/afternoon teas and lunches as well as the evening social events (the welcome reception and the conference dinner) will facilitate these interactions.

As those of us who have been on any conference organising committee will know, events of this magnitude don't come about without the dedicated commitment of many people. In this regard, I am particularly indebted to my Associate Chairs (Rosemary Wette and Annelies Roskvist), to Paul Kei Matsuda (Founding Chair of SSLW), to all members of the organising committee and to the wide range of additional supporters, sponsors and exhibitors identified in this handbook. Last, but not least, the support that each of you as delegates has shown is critical to the success of the conference. I trust that you will have an enjoyable and enriching experience over the next three days.

IELTS™

IELTS provides a valid and accurate assessment of communicative skills, based on extensive research in applied linguistics, language pedagogy, language assessment and technology. IELTS covers the full range of proficiency levels in Speaking, Listening, Reading and Writing, from non-user to expert user.

Test questions are developed by specialists in Australia, Canada, New Zealand, the UK and the US, using authentic materials sourced from all over the world. IELTS is the only high stakes test with New Zealand content and New Zealand accents, along with content and accents from the UK, US, Canada and Australia.

IELTS scores are accepted by over 9,000 universities, governments and professional registration bodies. IELTS plays an important role in migration to New Zealand.

Tests are available in more than 1,000 locations globally, including 15 in New Zealand.

The IELTS test is jointly owned by a partnership of education and language experts: the British Council, IDP: IELTS Australia and Cambridge English Language Assessment. These organisations are dedicated to academic excellence, cultural understanding, student placement and enabling success worldwide.
