Aim of the Series

Rethinking International Development is dedicated to publishing cutting-edge titles that focus on the broad area of 'development'. The core aims of the series are to present critical work that is cross disciplinary, challenges orthodoxies, reconciles theoretical depth with empirical research, explores the frontiers of development studies in terms of 'development' in both North and South and global inter-connectedness, and reflects on claims to knowledge and intervening in other people's lives.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

An edited volume is necessarily a collaborative project. Indeed numerous people across the globe have contributed to this volume, and in different ways.

This volume has its roots at the German Development Institute/ Deutsches Institut für Entwicklungspolitik (DIE). The editors are current or former researchers at the institute and they wish to acknowledge the German Development Institute's continued support for this volume. Most importantly, we would like to thank all authors for their valuable contributions, as well as their patience and diligence in responding to our requests throughout the process.

We are happy to have worked on this project with Palgrave Macmillan and we thank Christina Brian and Ambra Finotello for their continued support and assistance in seeing this volume through to its finalisation.

We are grateful to Stephen Brown and an anonymous reviewer for their valuable feedback on the book proposal and relevant comments on parts of the final product. Finally, the editors thank Cornelia Hornschild, Carolin Frisch, Lea Mohnen and Melanie Mirsch at the German Development Institute for their editorial and essential other support.

As is the usual practice, all errors remain the editors'.

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Gerardo Bracho a Mexican Diplomat, is currently Senior Advisor at AMEXCID, Mexico's Development Cooperation Agency. With many years of experience in the Development Cooperation Agenda, Mr Bracho has served as Senior Advisor at the DCD/DAC (2013–2014), Deputy Director General in AMEXCID (2011–2013) and Mexican (observer) DAC delegate (2005–2011). He has also been posted at the Mexican Embassies in the UK and Russia. Mr Bracho holds a master degree in Development Studies at the University of Sussex (IDS) and a Bachelors degree in Economics at the Autonomous University of Mexico.

Daniela Buscaglia has been working, since 2012, at the Joint Research Centre of the European Commission, where she joined the EU Aid Explorer team as an Economist, working on the design and implementation of a composite indicator on Aid Fragmentation. She holds a PhD in Political Economics, and she has working experiences as a researcher for the European Central Bank, Italian Ministry of the Treasury, Italian National Institute of Statistics and University of Pavia. Her research interests are mainly in Macroeconomics, in International Economics and Finance and in Development Economics.

Rachael Calleja is a PhD Candidate at the Norman Paterson School of International Affairs at Carleton University, Canada. Her dissertation focuses on understanding the determinants of the organizational structure of bilateral aid agencies and probing the link between aid management and donor performance. Rachael holds a BA in History and Political Science from McMaster University and an MA in Political Science from the University of Guelph.

David Carment is a Senior Fellow at the Centre for Global Cooperation Research in Germany and a full Professor of International Affairs at the Norman Paterson School of International Affairs, Carleton University. Carment is a Fellow of the Canadian Defence and Foreign Affairs Institute (CDFAI) and is listed in the Who's Who in International Affairs. Carment serves as the principal investigator for the Country Indicators for Foreign Policy project (CIFP). He was the Director of the Centre for Security and Defence Studies at Carleton University. His most recent work focuses on developing failed and fragile state risk assessment and early warning methodologies and evaluating models of third party intervention. He is the editor of Canadian Foreign Policy Journal.

Fredrik Ericsson is a Statistician at the International Telecommunication Union (ITU) with ten years of experience in quantitative analysis from the finance sector and international organisations. Prior to the ITU, he worked for over seven years as Statistical Analyst at the OECD focused on composition and allocation of development finance. His primary areas of expertise are data analysis and international statistics. Fredrik holds a Master's degree in Statistics from Uppsala University in Sweden and previously worked in the finance sector performing quantitative business analytics.

Mitsuaki Furukawa currently serves as Chief Representative for the South Sudan Office of the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA). The latter is the Japanese governments' agency tasked with providing bilateral Official Development Assistance (ODA) to developing countries. Dr Furukawa joined JICA in 1989 following 2 years engagement in the private sector. Before his posting in South Sudan he had served as Executive Senior Research Fellow of JICA Research Institute (2009–2014) and Resident Representative of JICA UK Office (2007–2009), among other posts. Dr Furukawa holds a PhD in Social Sciences from the Graduate School of Social Sciences, Hitotsubashi University, Japan.

Mark Furness is a senior researcher in the Bi- and Multilateral Development Cooperation department at the German Development Institute / Deutsches Institut für Entwicklungspolitik (DIE) in Bonn. His current research and policy advisory work focuses on EU development policy, aid effectiveness, the security-development nexus and development cooperation in the MENA region.

Anjula Garg has been working at the Joint Research Centre of the European Commission since 1997. She is currently managing the EU Aid Explorer project (<https://euaidexplorer.ec.europa.eu>) which supports donor coordination, transparency and aid effectiveness. She holds a Bachelor's degree in Physics from the University of Delhi, plus two postgraduate degrees in Engineering Computation and Computer Science from the UK. She has worked as a project leader in the UK, Germany and now Italy on Information Technology projects for almost 30 years in the areas of CAD/CAM, Formal Specification Languages, Management Information Systems, Object Oriented Technologies, and Gathering Information from the web.

Romilly Greenhill is Team Leader for Development Finance at the Overseas Development Institute. Her research interests include financing the Sustainable Development Goals and the perspectives of developing countries in managing the new aid landscape. Before joining ODI, Romilly worked as the aid transparency team leader and head of secretariat of the International Aid Transparency Initiative at the UK's Department for International Development (DFID). She has also worked for ActionAid UK and Cambodia, the New Economics Foundation, and the Ugandan Ministry of Finance, Planning and Economic Development. Romilly is the author of numerous articles and reports on aid and development finance.

Sven Grimm is senior researcher at the German Development Institute/ Deutsches Institut für Entwicklungspolitik (DIE) in Bonn, Germany, and Extraordinary Associate Professor of Stellenbosch University, South Africa. He is a political scientist with a strong interest in South-South cooperation, focusing particularly on external partners' cooperation with African states. He has led research projects on emerging economies' African relations and their implications for European cooperation policy. He has published widely specifically on China-Africa relations and was director of the Centre for Chinese Studies at Stellenbosch University, South Africa, between 2010 and 2014.

Rik Habraken is a PhD student at the School of International Development—University of East Anglia (United Kingdom) where he focuses on the effect of social embeddedness on aspirations in Eastern Uganda. He holds a Master's degree in Organisation Studies and in International Development. Previously, he worked at the Centre for International Development Issues Nijmegen (Netherlands) on civil society, public support, and the (new) aid architecture topics. He was also responsible for coordinating research cooperation with universities in Ghana and Indonesia.

Tanja Kasten is a policy consultant with the German Development Cooperation (GIZ). She is part of a specialized consultancy unit on aid effectiveness which serves as an advisory body for the German Ministry of Development (BMZ). Previously, she worked as a development worker and policy advisor in Guatemala in support of a local peacebuilding network. Tanja Kasten holds a PhD in Political Science and has focused her academic work on the nexus between peacebuilding and development.

Stephan Klingebiel is Head of the Department of Bi- and Multilateral Development Cooperation at the German Development Institute / Deutsches Institut für Entwicklungspolitik (DIE) in Bonn, Germany. His research and university teaching focuses on political economy of aid, aid & development effectiveness, political economy and governance issues in sub-Saharan Africa, and crisis prevention and conflict management. He is a regular Visiting Professor at Stanford University and a senior lecturer at the University of Marburg.

Erik Lundsgaarde is a Senior Researcher at the Danish Institute for International Studies with expertise on global multi-stakeholder initiatives, aid politics and the organization of donor systems. His publications include the books The Domestic Politics of Foreign Aid (Routledge 2013) and Africa toward 2030: Challenges for Development Policy (Palgrave Macmillan 2012). He holds MA and PhD degrees in Political Science from the University of Washington.

James Mackie is Senior Adviser on EU Development Policy at the European Centre for Development Policy Management (ECDPM) in Maastricht, Netherlands where he has worked since 2002. He coordinated the ECDPM contribution to the European Report on Development and led the team that produced ERD2013 on Post-2015: Global Action for an Inclusive and Sustainable Future. Prior to ECDPM he worked in the NGO development sector, latterly as Secretary General of the NGO-EU Liaison Committee (now CONCORD). Mackie holds a PhD in Geography from SOAS (London). He is also a Visiting Professor on international development at the College of Europe.

Timo Mahn is a researcher and public sector consultant at the German Development Institute / Deutsches Institut für Entwicklungspolitik (DIE) in the department on 'Bi- and Multilateral Development Cooperation'. His current research and policy advisory work focuses on the United Nations, aid modalities, public financial management and fraud prevention. He has published several articles on these issues. Timo has previously worked for the World Bank, German Financial Cooperation in Rwanda, as well as for the Joint Inspection Unit of the United Nations. He holds a Masters degree in Political Science from the Free University of Berlin and a Master of International Studies from the George Washington University in Washington DC.

Jens Marquardt is a Research Associate at the Martin Luther University Halle-Wittenberg, Germany. He holds a PhD in Political Science from the Freie Universität Berlin. Apart from his research on environmental development cooperation he is particularly interested in energy transitions and the role of power in multi-level governance systems. In Southeast Asia, Jens Marquardt worked for the German donor organization GIZ. He was previously employed at the Centre for Sustainability Management in Lüneburg and worked as a freelancer for adult education, public relations and communication.

Mario Negro is a senior economist in the World Bank Research Group seconded by the German Development Institute / Deutsches Institut für Entwicklungspolitik (DIE) in Bonn, Germany. He has worked at the European Parliament in the past. His fields of specialization are pro-poor growth, inclusiveness, inequality and poverty measurement as well as development cooperation policy, particularly European. Mario holds a BSc in Physics (University of Barcelona), an MA in Development Policies (University of Bremen), and a PhD in development economics (Jawaharlal Nehru University, India).
