

A COMPANION TO STATE POWER,
LIBERTIES & RIGHTS

EDITED BY Sharon Morley Jo Turner
Karen Corteen Paul Taylor

A COMPANION TO STATE POWER, LIBERTIES AND RIGHTS

Edited by Sharon Morley, Jo Turner,
Karen Corteen and Paul Taylor

First published in Great Britain in 2017 by

Policy Press
University of Bristol
1-9 Old Park Hill
Bristol BS2 8BB
UK
t: +44 (0)117 954 5940
pp-info@bristol.ac.uk
www.policypress.co.uk

North America office:
Policy Press
c/o The University of Chicago Press
1427 East 60th Street
Chicago, IL 60637, USA
t: +1 773 702 7700
f: +1 773 702 9756
www.press.uchicago.edu
sales@press.uchicago.edu

© Policy Press 2017

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

A catalog record for this book has been requested

ISBN 978-1-4473-2582-6 paperback

ISBN 978-1-4473-2581-9 hardcover

ISBN 978-1-4473-2584-0 ePub

ISBN 978-1-4473-2585-7 Mobi

ISBN 978-1-4473-2583-3 ePdf

The right of Sharon Morley, Jo Turner, Karen Corteen and Paul Taylor to be identified as editors of this work has been asserted by them in accordance with the 1988 Copyright, Designs and Patents Act.

All rights reserved: no part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or otherwise without the prior permission of Policy Press.

The statements and opinions contained within this publication are solely those of the authors and not of the University of Bristol or Policy Press. The University of Bristol and Policy Press disclaim responsibility for any injury to persons or property resulting from any material published in this publication.

Policy Press works to counter discrimination on grounds of gender, race, disability, age and sexuality.

Cover design by Andrew Corbett

Front cover image: www.alamy.com

Printed and bound in Great Britain by by CPI Group (UK) Ltd,

Croydon, CR0 4YY

Policy Press uses environmentally responsible print partners

Contributors

Obijiofor Aginam is assistant director and head of governance for Global Health at the United Nations University–International Institute for Global Health (UNU–IIGH) in Kuala Lumpur, and concurrently adjunct research professor of law at Carleton University, and visiting professor in the IR3S, University of Tokyo. Dr Aginam has held visiting professorships at universities in Costa Rica, Italy, South Africa and Japan. He is the author of Global health governance: International law and public health in a divided world (2005, University of Toronto Press). He holds a PhD from the University of British Columbia.

Gabriel Amitsis is associate professor of social security law in the Department of Business Administration at the Technology University of Athens, Greece. He has undertaken academic research and teaching since 1998 on the regulation of social security, anti-poverty, employment, social entrepreneurship and migration policies. He is the author and co-author of 20 books and has published in international edited books and journals.

Linda Asquith is a senior lecturer in criminology at Leeds Beckett University, UK, and has previously worked at Nottingham Trent University, UK, and the University of Leeds, UK. Her PhD on post-genocide life was awarded by the University of Huddersfield, UK, in 2015. Her current research focuses on life after miscarriages of justice.

David Balsamo is professor of social science and dean of faculty at the University of Chester, UK. He has worked as a painter and decorator, operating theatre technician, probation officer and latterly as an academic. His varied career has provided the impetus for a sustained interest and commitment to the sociology and political economy of work. David's doctorate examined the management of teaching and research in the neo-corporate university and was informed by the perspectives and cognitive dissonances of being an academic manager.

Philip Bean is emeritus professor of criminology and criminal justice at the University of Loughborough, UK, and a former director of the Midlands Centre for Criminology and Criminal Justice. He was secretary (1993–96) and later president of the British Society of Criminology (1996–99) and an associate of the General Medical Council (2000–05), sitting on their Fitness to Practice, Health and the Professional Panels. He is the author/editor of over 20 books and numerous papers in learned journals, mainly on mental disorder and crime, and drugs and crime, but also on other matters in criminology, namely, criminological theory. He is currently (since 2014) a visiting scholar at the University of Cambridge, UK.

Mark Bendall is a senior lecturer in politics at the University of Chester, UK. He has published on corporate social responsibility and state power, and has given conference papers spanning identity politics and criminalised identities. In 2007, he was shortlisted for Marketing Initiative of the Year at the Times Higher Awards.

Monish Bhatia is a lecturer in criminology at the Abertay University, Scotland. His teaching and research surrounds borders and the control of immigration, racism and harm. Monish is currently co-editing a volume on Media, crime and racism. Last year, he successfully completed a Carnegie Trust-funded project on destitution and drug use among asylum seekers, and his doctoral thesis focused on the impact of policies and procedures on asylum seekers and 'illegal' migrants in the UK.

Josepha Close is a researcher in international law who concluded her doctoral thesis at Middlesex University, London, UK. She holds a master's degree in law from the University of Liège, Belgium, an LLM in public international law from Queen Mary University, London, UK, and a graduate diploma in law from BPP University, London, UK. Her research interests include international criminal law, human rights and transitional justice.

Salvatore Coluccello works in the School of Humanities at Coventry University, UK. His main research interests are in organised crime, human trafficking and people smuggling, as well as the contemporary history, politics and culture of Italy. He is the author of Challenging the mafia mystique: Cosa Nostra from legitimisation to denunciation (2016, Palgrave Macmillan), he also co-edited Eurafrican migration, legal economic and social responses to irregular migration (2015, Palgrave Macmillan) and is currently working on a documentary exploring the status of the mafia and anti-mafia movement in Sicily.

Karen Corteen is a senior lecturer in criminal justice at Liverpool John Moores University, UK. Areas Karen has published in include victimology, critical criminology and hate crime. Her research interests comprise: zemiology; occupational-related harms within the sports entertainment industry; victimisation, survival and resistance; and visual victimology.

Meriel D'Artrey is head of the Department of Social and Political Science and a senior lecturer in politics at the University of Chester, UK. Meriel has an MA in politics from the University of Edinburgh and an MSc from the London School of Economics, UK, in the history of political thought. Her research for her DProf was on the teaching and learning of politics.

Bleddyn Davies has been a lecturer in law at Liverpool John Moores University, UK, since 2011. Prior to that, he was a teaching fellow and PhD candidate at the University of Liverpool, UK, completing his PhD in 2010. Among other teaching interests, he teaches the law of armed conflict at undergraduate and postgraduate level. His research interests are primarily public law.

Sinclair Dinnen is a senior fellow with the State, Society and Governance in Melanesia Program in the College of Asia and the Pacific at the Australian National University. His research examines legal pluralism, policing, security governance, politics and state formation in post-colonial societies. He has conducted extensive research and policy work in Melanesian countries, particularly Papua New Guinea and Solomon Islands.

Zaira Drammis is the head of monitoring and evaluation at ActionAid International. Prior to joining ActionAid, she worked at the International Secretariat of Amnesty International for 15 years in different positions, including campaigning and crisis response. She then created Amnesty's dedicated unit focused on strategy, evaluation and learning. She is an Argentine national living in London.

Karen Evans is a senior lecturer at the University of Liverpool, UK, in the Department of Sociology, Social Policy and Criminology, where she teaches and has published on the themes of gender, gendered justice, community, the city and crime.

Martin Evans lectures in international development at the University of Chester, UK. His interests lie in rural political and economic geographies in sub-Saharan Africa, particularly in conflict and 'post-conflict' situations. This research focuses on Casamance in southern Senegal, the scene of West Africa's longest-running civil conflict. His current project concerns the intersection of environmental and social change in Casamance and its implications for agriculture.

Carmen Gebhard is a lecturer in politics and international relations at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland. She previously held academic posts at the University of Nottingham, UK, the Institute of Advanced Studies in Vienna and the European Institute of Public Administration in Maastricht. Her research focuses on European Union politics, security and defence policy and small state foreign policy.

Helena Gosling is a senior lecturer in criminal justice at Liverpool John Moores University, UK. In 2015, she completed her PhD, entitled 'An invitation to change? An ethnographic study of a residential therapeutic community for substance use'. Helena has published articles in a number of leading journals, including Criminology and Criminal Justice, Howard Journal of Criminal Justice and the International Journal of Crime, Justice and Social Democracy.

Kirsty Greenwood is a PhD researcher at Liverpool John Moores University, UK, and visiting lecturer at the University of Chester, UK. Kirsty's master's thesis explored the regulation of 'deviant' women within the semi-penal institution of Liverpool Female Penitentiary (1809–1921). Her research interests include historical and contemporary carceral mobilities, the community punishment of women and gender-specific penal regimes.

Ros Hague is a lecturer in politics and international relations in the Division of Politics and International Relations, Nottingham Trent University, UK. Her research interests are in feminist theory and environmental theory, specifically looking at theories of autonomy, questions of identity and the human relation to nature.

Matthew Hall graduated with a PhD from the University of Sheffield, UK, in 2007, having previously graduated from Sheffield's MA in international criminology programme. He became a lecturer in law and criminal justice in 2008 and a senior lecturer in 2011, both at the University of Sheffield School of Law. In 2014, Matthew was appointed professor of law and criminal justice and director of research at the University of Lincoln, UK, School of Law. He has been interviewed on behalf of the European Commission as an expert contributor in the field of victimology to assist the development of a new directive on victims' rights and has also advised the South African Department of Justice and Constitutional Development concerning a review of South Africa's Victim Empowerment Scheme. More recently, Matthew has pioneered research on environmental victimisation and the application of environmental justice principles in the criminal justice system at the national and international levels.

Ruth Healey is a senior lecturer in human geography at the University of Chester, UK. She has worked in the field of asylum and refugees since 2003. Specifically, her research explores asylum seeker and refugee experiences in host countries, with a particular focus on integration policies and notions of belonging.

Charles T. Hunt is Vice-Chancellor's research fellow at the Centre for Global Research in the School of Global, Urban and Social Studies at RMIT University, Melbourne. His research focuses on United Nations (UN) peace operations and peace-building. He has worked with the Australian government assessing their role in peace operations and consults for the UN and a number of international humanitarian non-governmental organisations.

Peter Joyce is a principal lecturer in criminology at Manchester Metropolitan University, UK. His research interests are in criminal justice, policing and protest, and his recent publications include Palgrave dictionary of public order policing, protest and political violence (with Neil Wain) (2014, Palgrave), Criminal justice: An introduction (2013, Routledge) and Policing: Development and contemporary practice (2011, Sage).

Nitasha Kaul is a multidisciplinary academic and writer. She is currently an assistant professor in the Department of Politics and International Relations (DPIR) at the University of Westminster, London, UK. She has previously been a tenured academic in economics at the Bristol Business School and in Creative Writing in Bhutan. She has researched/written/spoken within and outside academia on identity, political economy, democracy, feminist and postcolonial theory, Kashmir, and Bhutan. Recently, she has addressed issues of nationalism and neoliberalism in contemporary India and the question of nation states and refugees in Europe. She has authored books including Imagining economics otherwise (2007, Routledge) and a Man Asian Literary Prize-shortlisted novel Residue (2014, Rainlight).

Alexander K. Lautensach, PhD, is associate professor at the University of Northern British Columbia, Canada. In 2010, he published Environmental ethics for the future: Rethinking education to achieve sustainability (Lambert Academic Publishers). His current research focuses on human ecology, cross-cultural education and environmental ethics. His work in human security centres on health-related and environmental aspects, as well as cultural safety.

Sabina W. Lautensach, PhD, serves on several university faculties lecturing in International Relations, human security and anthropology. She is the founding editor of the Journal of Human Security (JoHS) (see: <http://www.librelloph.com/journalofhumansecurity>). As director of the Human Security Institute, she coordinates collaborations with colleagues worldwide. She and Alex Lautensach co-edited the first university graduate-level textbook in human security, Human security in world affairs: Problems and opportunities (2013, Caesarpress).

Maggie Lee is professor of sociology in the Department of Sociology at the University of Hong Kong. She is principal investigator on a number of research projects, including the fear of crime, lifestyle migration in Asia and female transnational migrants. Her books include Human trafficking (2007, 2012, Willan) and Trafficking and global crime control (2011, Sage).

Nicholas Lord is a senior lecturer in the Centre for Criminology and Criminal Justice in the School of Law at the University of Manchester, UK. Nicholas has research expertise in white-collar, financial and organised crimes and frauds. His recent book Regulating corporate bribery in international business (2014, Routledge) was the winner of the British Society of Criminology Book Prize 2015.

David Lowe was a counterterrorism detective in the UK and is currently a principal lecturer at Liverpool John Moores University, UK, whose expertise on terrorism and security is frequently requested by UK and international media. Among his many publications is his 2015 book Policing terrorism (CRC Press).

Giuseppe Maglione is a lecturer in criminology at Edinburgh Napier University, Scotland. He received a PhD in legal theory from the University of Florence, Italy, and carried out research at the University of Cambridge, UK, Oslo, Norway and at the Max Planck Institute in Freiburg, Germany.

Ian Marsh is principal lecturer in criminology at Liverpool Hope University, UK. He has written, co-written and edited a number of books, including, most recently, Crime, justice and the media (2nd edn) (2014, Routledge), Sociology: Making sense of society (5th edn) (2013, Pearson) and Crime and criminal justice (2011, Routledge).

C. Augustus ‘Gus’ Martin is a professor of criminal justice administration at California State University, Dominguez Hills, where he also served for nearly 10 years in academic administration. Dr Martin’s research and professional interests are terrorism and extremism, homeland security, and the administration of justice. He is author of a number of books on the subjects of terrorism, homeland security and juvenile justice.

Agnieszka Martynowicz is a doctoral candidate at the School of Criminology, Politics and Social Policy at Ulster University. Her PhD research focuses on the situation of Polish male prisoners in Northern Ireland. She is also an independent researcher in the areas of human rights and international humanitarian law, criminal justice, and migration.

Simon Massey is a senior lecturer at Coventry University, UK. His main research interest is conflict management and Africa’s peace and security architecture. He has also published on irregular migration from Africa to Europe and on politics and security in Guinea-Bissau, Chad, the Comoros and Madagascar.

Liam McCann is a principal lecturer and critical criminologist at the University of Lincoln, UK, and has been programme leader there for their undergraduate and postgraduate criminology programmes. His research interests include state crime, racism, policing and the pedagogy of students’ use of feedback. His teaching philosophy is that education facilitates intellectual empowerment and can and should assist in securing greater social justice.

Jude McCulloch is professor of criminology at Monash University, Australia. Her latest book is Pre-crime: Pre-emption, precaution and the future (with Dean Wilson) (2016, Routledge).

Samuel Mercer is a PhD researcher with the Department of Social and Political Science at the University of Chester, UK. Samuel's research is focused on the political role of 'work' in society and in assessing the ramifications of defining and subsequently refusing 'work' for society, politics and its study.

Gill Miller leads the programme in international development studies at the University of Chester, UK. Annual visits with students to meet United Nations (UN) agencies in Geneva have provided insights into the operations and challenges facing the UN. Research interests include the geography of health in the developing world, and transitions from school to higher education. She writes regularly for Geography Review and the Geographical Association, and is trustee of the Field Studies Council and an international microfinance non-governmental organisation.

Sharon Morley is deputy head of the Department of Social and Political Science and a senior lecturer in criminology at the University of Chester, UK. Sharon's research interests include young women's experiences of violence, gender, space and self-regulation. More recently, her research and publications have spanned the areas of violence in society and the victimisation of health and social care professionals, as well as media representations of mentally disordered offenders. Sharon is a member of a number of sexual violence research networks.

Kate Moss is professor of criminal justice at the Central Institute for the Study of Public Protection, University of Wolverhampton, UK. Her research centres on the problem of women's homelessness, which she has researched for the European Commission. She has written six single-authored books and over 60 journal articles, papers and monographs.

Karen Murphy (PhD, LLM, BSocSc) is a human rights consultant and researcher at the School of Politics and International Relations, University College Dublin, Ireland. Karen has worked in academia and practice, with United Nations and European Union agencies and non-governmental organisations in Africa, the Middle East and Ireland. Her work focuses on: human rights and conflict, terrorism and insecurity; humanitarian policy and protection; gender equality and gender-based violence; and migration.

Emma Murray is a senior lecturer in criminal justice in the School of Law, Liverpool John Moores University, UK. Her work is dedicated to the problem of veterans within the criminal justice system, and, more recently, what the testimonies of veterans who have been convicted of an offence post-combat reveals about war and governance in the 21st century.

Gabe Mythen is professor of sociology based at the University of Liverpool, UK, and director of the Economic and Social Research Council North West Doctoral Training College. His academic research is located at the intersection of sociology, criminology and social policy, and is oriented towards critical studies of risk and security.

Orla Ní Cheallacháin is a Government of Ireland Postgraduate Scholar funded by the Irish Research Council and a PhD candidate in the School of Politics and International Relations, University College Dublin, Ireland. Her research interests include critical security studies, state responses to non-state violence and the politics of language use. Her doctoral research explores the dynamics of counterterrorism legislating processes in the UK.

Angus Nurse is director of criminology and sociology programmes in the School of Law, Middlesex University, London, UK. His background is in non-governmental organisation (NGO) policy work and in investigations, with 10 years' NGO and eight years' quasi-judicial experience. He researches and teaches green criminology, environmental law and human rights, and has authored two research monographs and a textbook on environmental crime.

Christian Pangilinan is C.V. Starr lecturer and director of transnational legal practice at Peking University School of Transnational Law in Shenzhen, China. Previously, he provided legal aid to asylum seekers in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania.

Christina Pantazis is a reader in criminology in the School for Policy Studies at the University of Bristol, UK. She has co-authored a number of articles (with Simon Pemberton) on the UK's counterterrorism policies, their impacts on communities and the implications for civil liberties.

Julie Papastamatelou holds a master's degree in social sciences from the University of Mannheim, Germany. She has further pursued a master's degree in criminal justice studies (University of Portsmouth, UK), a master's degree in criminology (University of Berne, Switzerland) and a master's degree in European Union studies (University of Salzburg, Austria). She currently works as a lecturer and researcher in Germany.

Tina G. Patel is senior lecturer in criminology at the University of Salford, UK. Tina's research and teaching interests relate to 'race'/racism, exclusion, police and violent behaviour. Tina is currently researching victims' perceptions of racially motivated hate crimes, and the use of social media to facilitate neighbourhood relations. She is the author of several books, including the 2016 text Race and society, published by Sage.

Sergio Peña-Neira is associate professor of law at Universidad Bernardo O'Higgins, Chile, has a doctorate from the International University of Andalucía, Huelva, and is a member of various associations related to international law and the philosophy of law (Transnational Institute and Center of Politics, Philosophy and Law of KCL, ILA, CISDL). His lines of research are: international law, the philosophy of law and comparative law. He has various publications in Spanish and English.

Gary R. Potter is a senior lecturer in criminology at Lancaster University, School of Law, UK. He has been teaching a specialist undergraduate course in green criminology for nearly 10 years, is a member of the International Green Criminology Work Group (see: <https://greencriminology.org>) and co-editor of The geography of environmental crime: Conservation, wildlife crime and environmental activism (with Angus Nurse and Matthew Hall) (2016, Palgrave).

Jason L. Powell, PhD, is a professor and teaches criminology at the University of Chester, UK. His research is on ageing, crime, social care, community development, qualitative methodology, social justice and the global dynamics of population ageing. He has published over 400 refereed articles, book chapters and reports, and has published 65 books. He is series editor of International Ageing and International Social Policy for Springer Publishers. He is associate editor of The Canadian Journal of Sociology and is editor-in-chief of US-based international journal Illness, Crisis & Loss (Sage). He has been visiting professor in the US, European Union, Canada, South Africa, Jordan and Australia.

Tamara Quiroga is associate professor of law at the Universidad de Buenos Aires and Universidad Católica Argentina. She has been working on public law, particularly, international law, in the Max Plank Institute for International and Comparative Law in Heidelberg, Germany. Her field of research is international law and criminal law. As a former student of a postgraduate programme on human rights at the University of Heidelberg, Germany, she is doing research in her field in Europe.

Larry Ray is professor of sociology at the University of Kent, UK, and a fellow of the Academy of Social Sciences. His research and publications address sociological theory, globalisation, post-communism, collective and interpersonal violence, and biosocial theories. Recent publications include Violence and society (2011, Sage) and Violence and society – towards a new sociology (with Jane Kilby), Sociological Review Monograph Series (2014, Wiley-Blackwell).

Joe Rigby is a lecturer in sociology at the University of Chester, UK. He was awarded a PhD from the University of Lancaster, UK, in 2014 for his research into the politics of racism, migration and border control in contemporary Europe. He is currently working on preparing the manuscript for publication in 2016.

Jeffrey Ian Ross, PhD, is a professor in the School of Criminal Justice, College of Public Affairs, at the University of Baltimore, US. He has specialised in corrections, policing, political crime, violence, urban subcultures and crime and justice in Native American communities for over two decades. Ross is the author, co-author, editor and co-editor of several books.

Federica Rossi holds a PhD in political sociology from the University of Paris Ouest Nanterre, France, and is currently a postdoctoral researcher at the Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales, France. Her PhD analyses the controversial debates of the 1970s, political violence and counterterrorism in Italy. Her current research focuses on the movements of victims of terrorism.

David Scott is a senior lecturer in criminology at Liverpool John Moores University, UK. He is an editor of the Howard Journal of Crime and Justice and the journal Justice, Power and Resistance. David has published widely on prisons, punishment and critical criminology and his most recent book is Emancipatory politics and praxis (2016, EG Press).

Gay W. Seidman is professor of sociology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, US. Her publications include Manufacturing militance: Workers' movements in Brazil and South Africa (1994, University of California Press) and Beyond the boycott: Labor rights, human rights, and transnational activism (2007, Russell Sage Foundation). Her current research project explores the dynamics of transnational 'shaming' movements, including the anti-apartheid movement (Social Research, 2015, vol 82, no 4).

Laureen Snider is an emeritus professor of sociology at Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario. Recent publications include: About Canada: Corporate crime (2015, Fernwood); 'Interrogating the algorithm: debt, derivatives and the social reconstruction of stock market trading', Critical Sociology, 24 February 2014 (available at: <http://crs.sagepub.com/content/early/2014/02/21/0896920513504603>); 'Law, regulation and safety crime: Exploring the boundaries of criminalizing powerful actors' (with Steve Bittle), Canadian Journal of Law & Society, June 2015; and 'Examining the Ruggie Report: can voluntary guidelines tame global capitalism?' (with Steve Bittle), Critical Criminology, 2013, vol 21: 177–92.

Carly Speed is currently studying for a PhD in criminology while also teaching the subject at Liverpool John Moores University, UK. Her PhD research investigates the deaths of detained patients in England and Wales, following on from her master's research in this area, which was shortlisted for the Howard League John Sunley Prize in 2014.

Steve Spencer is a senior lecturer in sociology at Sheffield Hallam University, UK. He has worked at several universities in Australia, with a background in anthropology and cultural and media studies. His research interests include the exploration of 'race', ethnicity, media representation and social identities, and the visual and popular cultural mediation of social and political values in everyday life. Current research has focused on inner-city areas of Sheffield and the ways in which perceptions of place and social identity become inextricably connected. Other interests include the exploration of contested spaces through collaborative ethnographic work with groups who have experienced oppression in Australia and in Nova Scotia, Canada.

Elizabeth Stanley is reader in criminology and Rutherford Discovery Fellow at the Institute of Criminology, Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. Her research has focused on state crime, human rights, institutional victimisation and issues of justice in relation to events in New Zealand, Timor-Leste, West Papua, South Africa, Chile and the UK.

Kelly Staples is a lecturer in international politics at the University of Leicester, UK. She obtained her PhD in politics from the University of Manchester, UK, in 2008, and is the author of Rethorising statelessness (2012, Edinburgh University Press). Her ongoing research is on responsibility and protection in international relations.

Paul Taylor is deputy head of the Department of Social and Political Science and a senior lecturer in criminology at the University of Chester, UK. He is the associate editor of the journal Illness, Crisis & Loss (Sage) and sits on a number of journal editorial boards. Paul has written and researched in the area of the importance of occupational culture in fields such as the military, mental health care and policing. In addition to this, he publishes in the area of ageing, psychiatric care/control and mental health and criminal justice discourse and policy convergence.

Edgar B. Tembo is a senior lecturer and the programme leader for both the politics and the international relations degree programmes at the University of Chester, UK. In addition to broader, contemporary, security issues, Dr Tembo's research centres upon counterterrorism. He is the author of US–UK counterterrorism after 9/11: A qualitative approach (2014, Routledge).

Manuel Terol is professor of law at the Faculty of Law of Universidad Pablo de Olavide, Spain, and received his PhD from the Universidad de Seville, Spain. He is a member of various European associations related to public law, particularly, constitutional law. His lines of research are constitutional law, environmental law, the theory of law and the interpretation and application of international law into national and European Union legal system. Between 2008 and 2011, he contributed to the new constitution of Morocco. He has published extensively and regularly and has been the director of PhD theses and a contributor to seminars and conferences on the aforementioned subject.

Steve Tombs is professor of criminology at the Open University, UK. He has a long-standing interest in the incidence, nature and regulation of corporate and state crime and harms. Recent publications include: Social protection after the crisis? Regulation without enforcement (2015, Policy Press) and The corporate criminal. Why corporations must be abolished (with David Whyte) (2015, Routledge). He is a trustee and board member of Inquest.

James Treadwell is a senior lecturer in criminology at Birmingham City University, UK. He is known for undertaking ethnographic and qualitative research for a number of crime and criminal justice-related projects. His books include Riots and political protest (with Simon Winlow, Steve Hall and Daniel Briggs) (2015, Routledge); Football hooliganism, fan behaviour (with Matt Hopkins) (2014, Palgrave Macmillan) and Crime and criminology: The essentials (2006, 2013, Sage).

Jo Turner is a senior lecturer at the University of Chester, UK. Jo's eclectic mix of research interests come under the broad umbrella of comparative criminology: comparisons with the past – the history of criminal justice; comparisons globally – state crimes in the international arena; and gender-based comparisons – women's experiences of the criminal justice system.

Azrini Wahidin is a professor of criminology and criminal justice at Nottingham Trent University (NTU), UK. Prior to her appointment at NTU, she established the criminology undergraduate degree programme at Queen's University, Belfast, in the School of Sociology, Social Policy and Social Work. A selection of her publications include Ex-combatants, gender and peace in Northern Ireland: Women, political protest and the prison experience (2016, Palgrave Macmillan) and Older women and the criminal justice system: Running out of time (2004, Jessica Kingsley Publications). She sits on various editorial boards and has written a number of key criminology textbooks. She holds a visiting professorship in the Faculty of Law, University of Malaya.

Sandra Walklate is Eleanor Rathbone Chair of Sociology at the University of Liverpool, UK, and adjunct professor at QUT in Brisbane, Australia. Internationally, she is recognised for her work in victimology and research on criminal victimisation. In 2014, Sandra received the British Society of Criminology's outstanding achievement award and she is currently editor-in-chief of the British Journal of Criminology.

Lyn Warrenner focuses her research on examining girls' participation in the 11-year civil war in Sierra Leone (1991–2002) and the challenges they faced during the post-conflict reintegration process. Girl soldiers are perhaps one of the most under-represented groups of 'war-affected' citizens. The official story of the conflict, reflected in the literature and international organisations' reports, largely omits the participation of girl soldiers. Her research challenges mainstream narratives that recount the so-called post-war period, which are silent on the experiences of girls.

Leanne Weber is Australian Research Council Future Fellow in the School of Social Sciences at Monash University, Melbourne, Australia. She researches border control using criminological and human rights frameworks. Her books include Crime, justice and human rights (with Elaine Fishwick and Marinella Marmo) (2014, Palgrave) and The Routledge international handbook on criminology and human rights (with Elaine Fishwick and Marinella Marmo) (forthcoming, Routledge).

Lisa White is a senior lecturer in criminology at the University of Lincoln, UK, where she delivers courses that lie at the intersection between criminology and International Relations. Lisa has a particular interest in state crime, human rights and conflict. Her recent monograph is entitled Transitional justice and legacies of state violence: Talking about torture in Northern Ireland (2015, Routledge).

Gary Wilson is a senior lecturer in law at Liverpool John Moores University, UK. He specialises in international law, particularly relating to collective security within the United Nations system, statehood and secession, and the use of force. He is the author of The United Nations and collective security (2014, Routledge) and numerous other publications.

Mark Worrell is associate professor of sociology at SUNY Cortland, USA, and associate editor of the journal Critical Sociology. Mark has published widely in critical social theory journals, including Telos, Rethinking Marxism and Current Perspectives in Social Theory. His latest book on terror and imperialism was published in 2013 by Routledge.

Acknowledgements

With the completion of this, the third Companion in the series, comes the pleasure once again to thank those involved in translating an initial idea into print. Without the continued support of Policy Press, and the guiding expertise of Senior Commissioning Editor Victoria Pittman, what presents here would not have been possible. Gratitude also goes to those in the editing, production and marketing departments of Policy Press, in addition to those who have been involved in scrutinising and reviewing initial proposals for the series and this book.

Working with a wide range of contributors on this Companion, and those previous, has been a hugely enjoyable experience. As editors of this collection, we have never tired of learning from the valuable perspectives of others within and outside of academia. The diversity of voices here in this book, we hope, vitalises the current and future critical debates in this area, nationally and internationally, and provides a rich source of reference that can be kept close at hand.

Thank you to all involved, contributors, professionals at Policy Press and critical friends who have offered constructive advice and support along the way – it has been a pleasure working with you all.