

Alcohol, Drugs, and Arbitration

BY ROBERT COULSON

WITH MITCHELL D. GOLDBERG

Alcohol, Drugs, and Arbitration

An Analysis of Fifty-Nine Arbitration Cases

BY ROBERT COULSON
WITH MITCHELL D. GOLDBERG

Published by the
AMERICAN ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION

ISBN 0-943001-20-X
Library of Congress Catalog Card Number:
87-71691

ALCOHOL, DRUGS, AND ARBITRATION. Copyright © 1987 by the American Arbitration Association. All rights reserved. Printed in the United States of America. No part of this book may be used or reproduced in any manner without permission, except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical articles and reviews.

Second Printing, November 1988

Order from

American Arbitration Association
140 West 51st Street
New York, New York 10020-1203
212-484-4009

Contents

INTRODUCTION	7
1. EMPLOYER DRUG POLICIES AND COLLECTIVE BARGAINING	15
Drunk in a Powder Keg
One for the Union
The Safety Factor
A Nuclear Plant Is No Place for Drugs
Is Marijuana More Dangerous than Alcohol?
Drive a Truck on Five Beers a Day?
Sobering Up in the Ohio River
An Empty Bottle of Beer
2. PROBLEMS OF PROOF	39
Caught in the Act
One Hit and One Miss
A Hot Lunch Box
Now You See It, Now You Don't!
Under the Influence?
Drunk or under Medication?
3. TESTING FOR DRUGS OR ALCOHOL	57
A Blood Test to Confirm Intoxication
Testing the Christmas Spirits
A Fallen Worker—A Faulty Test
A Chance for a Second Test?
This Drug Test Flunked the Test
Is Refusal to Take a Drug Test Grounds for Discharge?
Does Mouthwash Smell Like Alcohol?
How to Install Drug Testing in a Union Plant
Is Testing a Bargaining Issue?

4. OFF-DUTY ABUSE	83
One Last Chance
What Urine Tests Don't Prove
A Drug Test for the Night Shift
The Definition of "Off Duty"
Smoking Pot in the Parking Lot
Discharged for Selling Cocaine
Would You Want This Woman Counseling Your Children?
Should a Drug Pusher Work with the Mentally Retarded?
Are Correctional Workers in a Special Category?
Must Nuclear Workers Be Drug Free?
Must a Union Be Given Prior Notice?
5. THE TEST OF CHRONIC ABUSE	109
A Chronic Alcoholic
An Airline's Approach to Alcoholism
Alcoholism Alone Is Not Just Cause
One Last Chance
Is Alcoholism a Disease Like Emphysema?
Would You Take Him Back?
Terminating an Alcoholic Is Never Easy
Was He Pickled on a Spiced Dill Pickle?
The Case of the Drunken Pig Sticker
Who Can Be Salvaged?
There Must Come a Time . . .
A Case for Rehabilitation
When Does Absenteeism Become a Drug Problem?
6. THE USE OF UNDERCOVER AGENTS	145
Is It Smart to Send in the Narcs?
Caveat Vendor
Fired for Flogging Two Black Mollies on Campus
A Videotaped Pot Party in the Locker Room
If You Must Do It, Do It Right!
A Company Runs Its Own Drug Bust
A Drug Bust Called MEG

7. POSSESSION AND USE	163
Fired for Flushing the Toilet
Quaalude Abuse in Paradise
Burned and Then Burned Again
Two Sackers Sacked for Pot
A Tractor-Trailer Driver Gets Another Chance
CONCLUSION	177
BIBLIOGRAPHY	181
VOLUNTARY LABOR ARBITRATION RULES (INCLUDING STREAMLINED LABOR ARBITRATION RULES)	187
AMERICAN ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION OFFICES	198

Alcohol, Drugs, and Arbitration

An Analysis of Fifty-Nine Arbitration Cases

BY ROBERT COULSON
WITH MITCHELL D. GOLDBERG

Published by the
AMERICAN ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION

ISBN 0-943001-20-X
Library of Congress Catalog Card Number:
87-71691

ALCOHOL, DRUGS, AND ARBITRATION. Copyright © 1987 by the American Arbitration Association. All rights reserved. Printed in the United States of America. No part of this book may be used or reproduced in any manner without permission, except in the case of brief quotations embodied in critical articles and reviews.

Second Printing, November 1988

Order from

American Arbitration Association
140 West 51st Street
New York, New York 10020-1203
212-484-4009

Contents

INTRODUCTION	7
1. EMPLOYER DRUG POLICIES AND COLLECTIVE BARGAINING	15
Drunk in a Powder Keg
One for the Union
The Safety Factor
A Nuclear Plant Is No Place for Drugs
Is Marijuana More Dangerous than Alcohol?
Drive a Truck on Five Beers a Day?
Sobering Up in the Ohio River
An Empty Bottle of Beer
2. PROBLEMS OF PROOF	39
Caught in the Act
One Hit and One Miss
A Hot Lunch Box
Now You See It, Now You Don't!
Under the Influence?
Drunk or under Medication?
3. TESTING FOR DRUGS OR ALCOHOL	57
A Blood Test to Confirm Intoxication
Testing the Christmas Spirits
A Fallen Worker—A Faulty Test
A Chance for a Second Test?
This Drug Test Flunked the Test
Is Refusal to Take a Drug Test Grounds for Discharge?
Does Mouthwash Smell Like Alcohol?
How to Install Drug Testing in a Union Plant
Is Testing a Bargaining Issue?

4. OFF-DUTY ABUSE

83

One Last Chance

What Urine Tests Don't Prove

A Drug Test for the Night Shift

The Definition of "Off Duty"

Smoking Pot in the Parking Lot

Discharged for Selling Cocaine

Would You Want This Woman Counseling Your Children?

Should a Drug Pusher Work with the Mentally Retarded?

Are Correctional Workers in a Special Category?

Must Nuclear Workers Be Drug Free?

Must a Union Be Given Prior Notice?

5. THE TEST OF CHRONIC ABUSE

109

A Chronic Alcoholic

An Airline's Approach to Alcoholism

Alcoholism Alone Is Not Just Cause

One Last Chance

Is Alcoholism a Disease Like Emphysema?

Would You Take Him Back?

Terminating an Alcoholic Is Never Easy

Was He Pickled on a Spiced Dill Pickle?

The Case of the Drunken Pig Sticker

Who Can Be Salvaged?

There Must Come a Time . . .

A Case for Rehabilitation

When Does Absenteeism Become a Drug Problem?

6. THE USE OF UNDERCOVER AGENTS

145

Is It Smart to Send in the Narcs?

Caveat Vendor

Fired for Flogging Two Black Mollies on Campus

A Videotaped Pot Party in the Locker Room

If You Must Do It, Do It Right!

A Company Runs Its Own Drug Bust

A Drug Bust Called MEG

7. POSSESSION AND USE	163
Fired for Flushing the Toilet
Quaalude Abuse in Paradise
Burned and Then Burned Again
Two Sackers Sacked for Pot
A Tractor-Trailer Driver Gets Another Chance
CONCLUSION	177
BIBLIOGRAPHY	181
VOLUNTARY LABOR ARBITRATION RULES (INCLUDING STREAMLINED LABOR ARBITRATION RULES)	187
AMERICAN ARBITRATION ASSOCIATION OFFICES	198

Introduction

American workers consume an enormous amount of alcohol and drugs. It has been estimated that twenty million smoke marijuana, and millions more are heavy drinkers. The consumption of such substances saturates our society. On the job, it creates many kinds of problems for management, including increased absenteeism and reduced productivity.

This book looks at the drug and alcohol problem through the eyes of labor arbitrators. It is based on dozens of cases decided in recent years in which unions went to arbitration to protect the legal and contractual rights of their members.

In the United States, members of labor unions are protected by collective bargaining agreements that spell out the working conditions and other aspects of employment, establish a secure relationship between union and employer, and provide a procedure under which employee grievances can be resolved. Generally, the union has the right to complain whenever it believes that one of its members has been treated unjustly, in violation of the employee rights guaranteed by the contract. If the dispute is not resolved by discussion between the union and management, it can be submitted to an impartial arbitrator. An arbitration hearing is somewhat akin to an informal trial, with the employer attempting to justify its action and the union asserting the rights of its members. The format of the arbitration is described in the arbitration clause of the contract, which often refers to the Voluntary Labor Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association (printed at the end of this book). Usually, an arbitrator is mutually selected by the parties from among the more than three thousand professional labor experts who serve in that capacity. A main source of arbitrators is the national panel of the American Arbitration Association.

8 Alcohol, Drugs, and Arbitration

In the cases in this book, arbitrators wrestle with many kinds of problems created by substance abuse. When an employee comes to work drunk, what should management do? What kind of discipline is appropriate? Is an employer obliged to rehabilitate an alcoholic or drug addict? Should an employer have the right to terminate such a worker?

What about drug testing? How accurate is it? Should such testing be required prior to employment, used on a random basis, or imposed only when some drug-related problem has arisen? Must the union consent to such testing?

The trend today is to treat drug addiction and alcoholism as illnesses. Must arbitrators follow the same line? How concerned should they be about the business needs of employers? Should an arbitrator consider the testimony of coworkers who might not want an alcoholic or drug user returned to work? What is the relationship between substance abuse and job performance?

Drugs are hardly a novelty. Their widespread use in the United States reflects in part our unique willingness to respond to the market. In answer to consumer demand for drugs, modern production techniques, combined with diabolical marketing and distribution systems, have converted drug dissemination into an extremely profitable business.

Are we doing enough to counteract the drug industry? Eighty-five percent of the $1.7 billion anti-drug budget for 1986 was spent on law enforcement. Only fifteen percent went into research, education, and treatment. Enforcement seems to have been ineffectual. Drugs of all kinds can be purchased in the street, even such obvious killers as heroin and "crack." It is no wonder that labor arbitrators are encountering drug cases with increasing frequency.

In this book, alcohol is treated as simply one more drug. True, drinking is not illegal, except for minors. Many American workers indulge in recreational drinking. Employers themselves provide alcohol to their employees at parties and other special occasions in the belief that it encourages socialization. But like other drugs, alcohol can be abused.

The cases in this book focus on the abuse. No attempt has been made to clarify the ethical distinctions between the various substances used by American workers. Crack. Grass. Booze. No matter!

Of the arbitration awards described here, forty-three were from private industry and sixteen from the public sector. They arose in various parts of the United States. Twenty-four were won by management, eighteen by unions. Twelve were something of a compromise in that while discharge was not upheld, the grievants were given a substantial penalty. Three of the cases are difficult to categorize because the grievants were put back to work, but only after successfully completing rehabilitation programs. In two cases, the arbitrators were asked to advise the parties about whether new drug policies could be instituted.

Management won most of the cases involving undercover investigators and cases where a termination was based on drug testing. Otherwise, the decisions fell almost equally on each side. Arbitrators seem to "call them as they see them." Every case is different. Neither side would be in arbitration unless it thought that it had some chance of winning.

10 Alcohol, Drugs, and Arbitration

In almost every case, the arbitrator's award is accepted by both parties as a final determination of the issues involved. In their collective bargaining contract, they have agreed to abide by that decision. The Supreme Court of the United States, in United Steelworkers of America v. Enterprise Wheel and Car Corporation, 363 U.S. 593 (1960), told courts to defer to the awards of labor arbitrators, provided they "draw their essence from the collective bargaining agreement." Courts have generally followed that ruling, although there is a compelling itch among some judges to second-guess arbitrators.

Such a case is S.D. Warren Company v. United Paperworkers International Union, AFL-CIO, Local 1069, 815 F.2d 178 (1st Cir. 1987), vacated and remanded, 108 S. Ct. 497 (1988). This case, referred to as Warren I, has been up to the Supreme Court once, and may be again. In the arbitration, Dr. Suzanne Butler Gwiazda, a Boston arbitrator, had agreed that three women working in a paper mill had violated plant rules by selling small amounts of marijuana to an undercover agent. They had been discharged. She reduced their discharges to suspensions.

The arbitrator noted that the company safety policy handbook said that violations of certain rules, including the marijuana rule, "may mean immediate discharge." She analyzed the company's past practice. The vast majority of such infractions had been penalized by something less than immediate discharge. Specifically, of the forty-one violations of the rules in the record, only two had resulted in immediate discharge. Both involved incarceration for serious crimes: manslaughter and incest.

After considering the facts of each case, the arbitrator reduced the employees' penalties to suspensions ranging from four to seven months. The grievants were to receive full back pay, seniority, and benefits, minus interim earnings and pay for the period of their suspensions. The arbitrator concluded that the discharges should be “overturned on the grounds that they were excessively harsh in light of past disciplinary practice for similarly serious Mill Rule 7 violations. Heavy suspensions are imposed, however, to impress upon the grievants the seriousness of their misconduct.” Her award was issued on September 19, 1985.

The matter went before a magistrate in the U.S. district court in Maine, who recommended that the award be vacated on the grounds that the arbitrator had exceeded her authority. The district judge did not accept the magistrate’s recommendation and confirmed the award.

This decision, in turn, was reversed by a three-judge panel of the court of appeals for the First Circuit, which concluded that the arbitrator’s decision did not draw its essence from the agreement and that it violated public policy.

Judge Pieras, in the First Circuit decision, emphasized the national policy against the use of drugs in the workplace: “The nation has focused on the corrosive consequences of drug sale and use and has devoted itself to their eradication. In particular, the workshop is a place where such usage is abominable not only because of the health hazard it creates, but also because it creates an unsafe atmosphere and is deteriorative of production, the quality of the products, and competition.” He pointed out that it was dangerous to use drugs in a paper mill, expressing concern about possible injuries to employees.

On the issue of contract interpretation, Judge Pieras was particularly critical of the arbitrator’s opinion: “The linguistic legerdemain that this arbitrator performed was an attempt to garner more authority to herself than the parties agreed to give her. As such, she exceeded her authority.”