

VOLUME I | A-C

EDITED BY

WESLEY G. JENNINGS

The Encyclopedia of
CRIME AND PUNISHMENT

WILEY Blackwell

The Encyclopedia of Crime and Punishment

Volume I
A – C

Edited by
Wesley G. Jennings

WILEY Blackwell

This edition first published 2016
© 2016 John Wiley & Sons, Inc.

Registered Office

John Wiley & Sons Ltd, The Atrium, Southern Gate, Chichester, West Sussex, PO19 8SQ, UK

Editorial Offices

350 Main Street, Malden, MA 02148-5020, USA

9600 Garsington Road, Oxford, OX4 2DQ, UK

The Atrium, Southern Gate, Chichester, West Sussex, PO19 8SQ, UK

For details of our global editorial offices, for customer services, and for information about how to apply for permission to reuse the copyright material in this book please see our website at www.wiley.com/wiley-blackwell.

The right of Wesley G. Jennings to be identified as the author of the editorial material in this work has been asserted in accordance with the UK Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, except as permitted by the UK Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, without the prior permission of the publisher.

Wiley also publishes its books in a variety of electronic formats. Some content that appears in print may not be available in electronic books.

Designations used by companies to distinguish their products are often claimed as trademarks. All brand names and product names used in this book are trade names, service marks, trademarks or registered trademarks of their respective owners. The publisher is not associated with any product or vendor mentioned in this book.

Limit of Liability/Disclaimer of Warranty: While the publisher and author have used their best efforts in preparing this book, they make no representations or warranties with respect to the accuracy or completeness of the contents of this book and specifically disclaim any implied warranties of merchantability or fitness for a particular purpose. It is sold on the understanding that the publisher is not engaged in rendering professional services and neither the publisher nor the author shall be liable for damages arising herefrom. If professional advice or other expert assistance is required, the services of a competent professional should be sought.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data is available for this title.
9781118519714 (hardback)

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

Cover image: Front cover from L-R: © OskariVara / iStockphoto; © Lyle Leduc / Getty Images; © Meinzahn / iStockphoto; © Sakdawut14 / iStockphoto. Spine © Hill Street Studios / Getty Images.

Set in 9.5/11.5pt MinionPro by SPi Global, Chennai, India
Printed and bound in Singapore by Markono Print Media Pte Ltd

1 2016

About the Editors

Editor-in-Chief

Wesley G. Jennings, PhD, is associate professor, associate chair, and undergraduate director in the Department of Criminology, has a courtesy appointment in the Department of Mental Health Law and Policy, and is a faculty affiliate of the Florida Mental Health Institute in the College of Behavioral and Community Sciences at the University of South Florida. In addition, he also has a courtesy appointment in the Department of Health Outcomes & Policy and is a faculty affiliate of the Institute for Child Health Policy in the College of Medicine at the University of Florida. He received his doctorate degree in criminology from the University of Florida. He has over 200 publications, his h-index is 27 (i-index of 66), and he has over 2,500 citations to his published work. He was recently recognized as the #1 criminologist in the world (at his previous rank of assistant professor: Copes et al., Journal of Criminal Justice Education, 2012, <http://www.tandfonline.com/doi/abs/10.1080/10511253.2012.683016#.Vbv1RvUVN0>) and the #3 criminologist in the world across all ranks in terms of his peer-reviewed scholarly publication productivity in the top criminology and criminal justice journals (Cohn & Farrington, Journal of Criminal Justice Education, 2014, <http://www.tandfonline.com/doi/abs/10.1080/10511253.2014.889728#/doi/abs/10.1080/10511253.2014.889728>). He is also the author (with David Farrington and Alex Piquero) of a recently published, academic press book with Springer, Offending from childhood to late middle age: Recent results from the Cambridge Study in delinquent development, and is the author (with Jennifer Reingle) of a recently published textbook with Wolters Kluwer, Criminological and criminal justice research methods. His major research interests include longitudinal data analysis, police body-worn cameras, sex offending, gender, race/ethnicity, the victim-offender overlap, and early childhood prevention. In addition, he is a member of the American Society of Criminology, a lifetime member of the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences, and a member of both the Midwestern and the Southern Criminal Justice Associations.

Associate Editors

George E. Higgins, PhD, received his PhD in criminology at Indiana University of Pennsylvania in 2001. Prior to joining the faculty at the University of Louisville where he is currently a tenured professor, he was a tenure track faculty member in criminal justice at West Virginia State University. His research focuses on testing criminological theories. Dr Higgins publishes consistently with students and colleagues from around the world.

David N. Khey, PhD, is a visiting assistant professor at University of Louisiana at Lafayette and has focused his research on a few areas in criminology, criminal justice, and forensic science. In particular, he is currently investigating campus crime and deviance; drug policy, control, and toxicology; and the changing evidentiary power of forensic science technologies. Born and raised in South Florida during the Cocaine Cowboy regime, drug policy and enforcement quickly piqued his interest. In this topical area, Dr Khey has presented research on drug and alcohol use/abuse and provided policy analysis to local and state officials in Florida. A highlight of this work includes an invitation to address the Governor's Office Drug Policy Advisory Council in 2007. Dr Khey is an active member of the American Society of Criminology, American Academy of Forensic Sciences, and Southern Criminal Justice Association. Outside of criminology and forensic science research, Dr Khey has excelled in developing and administrating online learning environments and takes a special interest in internet media, learning, and digital crime/forensics.

Mildred Maldonado-Molina, PhD, is associate professor in the College of Medicine, Department of Health Outcomes & Policy and the Institute for Child Health Policy at the University of Florida. Her research program focuses on reducing health disparities in alcohol use and alcohol-related consequences, with particular focus on improving the health of minority children and adolescents. She is particularly interested in examining rates of substance use and violence among US-born and foreign-born Hispanic adolescents. Her work includes the application of innovative statistical techniques to the study of the effects of context and environment (e.g., alcohol, driving, and safety policies) on behavioral and mortality outcomes. She focuses on the application of statistical methods across nationally representative data that are hierarchical and longitudinally intensive. She enjoys working with graduate and undergraduate students.

Notes on Contributors

Bakhitah Abdul-Ra'uf is a sociocultural and applied anthropologist, and associate professor of criminal justice at Radford University in Radford, VA. She earned her PhD from the University of South Florida. Her research interests include police subculture, ethnography, race and ethnicity, social justice, and international criminal justice, including Shari'a Law.

Iman Abubaker recently completed her master's at Indiana University of Pennsylvania. Her research interests include comparative justice, social deviance, ethnography, theory, and international criminal justice as well as other social issues within the criminal justice field, both nationally and globally.

Laura E. Agnich is currently an assistant professor in the Department of Criminal Justice and Criminology at Georgia Southern University. Her research focuses on multiple types of violence in schools, including bullying and mass violence, and the relationship between victimization and drug use among marginalized populations, and has been published in journals such as Journal of Crime and Justice, Journal of School Violence, Deviant Behavior, and Addictive Behaviors.

Sanaz Alasti is director of the Center for Death Penalty Studies at Lamar University, and assistant professor of criminal justice at Lamar University, Texas State University System, where she teaches criminal justice and legal classes. She is the author of several books on criminal law and comparative punishment practices. Alasti attended numerous conferences in the United States, Middle East, and Europe to discuss the arbitrariness of capital punishment.

Erik Alda is a doctoral candidate in the department of Justice, Law and Criminology at the American University. His research focuses on police performance, police efficiency, and crime in developing countries.

Geoffrey P. Alpert is a professor in the Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice at the University of South Carolina and Griffith University, in Brisbane, Australia. Dr Alpert has been conducting research on high-risk police activities for more than 25 years, and is a monitor for the consent decree in New Orleans.

Lorna Alvarez-Rivera obtained her PhD from the University of Florida, Department of Sociology and Criminology and Law. Her research interests expand over a number of criminological and criminal justice-related areas, but her primary focus is the cross-cultural study of criminological theories and immigration and crime. Some of her recent publications have appeared in the American Journal of Criminal Justice, Journal of Drug Issues, and the Journal of Criminal Justice Education.

Anne Alvesalo-Kuusi is a professor of sociology of law at the University of Turku, Finland. She also holds a post as a senior researcher at the Finnish Institute of Occupational Health. She has studied extensively in the area of economic and corporate crime control. In particular, her studies have focused on the problems of policing safety crimes and the misuse of migrant labor. Her areas of interest also include the regulation and surveillance of work.

Michael P. Anastario is a research sociologist in the Policing, Security and Investigative Science Program at RTI International. His research focuses on the use of forensic evidence in sexual assault, and HIV prevention.

Viviana Andreescu is an associate professor in the Department of Justice Administration at the University of Louisville. Her recent research focuses on intercountry comparisons of criminal justice issues related to social and cultural minorities, victimization and fear of crime, perceptions of police, and police integrity.

Barbara A. Babb is an associate professor of law and the founder and director of the Sayra and Neil Meyerhoff Center for Families, Children and the Courts at the University of Baltimore School of Law, where she has taught various family law courses since 1989. Her interdisciplinary scholarship, published widely and including articles in the Southern California Law Review, the Indiana Law Journal, and the Family Court Review, among others, focuses on therapeutic jurisprudence, the ecology of human development, court reform in family law, and unified family courts. She has spoken extensively at the state, national, and international levels, and she has participated in many court and law reform projects.

Julie Marie Baldwin is an assistant professor at Missouri State University. Her research interests include courts, military service and crime/delinquency, drug use and policy, and law and society. Some of her most recent publications (2015) can be found in the Journal of Criminal Law and Criminal Justice Policy Review.

J. C. Barnes is an associate professor in the School of Criminal Justice at the University of Cincinnati. He is a biosocial criminologist whose research seeks to understand how genetic and environmental factors combine to impact criminological phenomena. Recent works have attempted to reconcile behavioral genetic findings with theoretical developments in criminology. He has published in outlets such as Aggressive Behavior, Behavior Genetics, Criminology, Developmental Psychology, Intelligence, Journal of Marriage and Family, Justice Quarterly, Journal of Theoretical Biology, and PLOS ONE.

Kimberly L. Barrett is an assistant professor in the Department of Sociology, Anthropology, and Criminology at Eastern Michigan University. Her research interests include green criminology, environmental justice, and youth public health issues. Kimberly's recent work has been published in the British Journal of Criminology, Journal of Crime and Justice, and Journal of School Violence.

Emmanuel P. Barthe is an associate professor in the Criminal Justice Department. His research interests lie in the arena of policing, situational crime prevention, and spatial analysis. His publications include work on the impact of casinos and crime, the effect of different low-income housing on disorder patterns, and the legal ramifications of traffic checkpoints. He works closely with local law enforcement agencies and has served as an external evaluator for several projects, including a methamphetamine interdiction effort, a campaign to reduce commercial traffic accidents, and a BJA-funded Smart Policing grant covering prescription drug abuse.

Kathryn Baxter is a research associate at the University of South Carolina, who has engaged in research in both the public and private sectors.

Peter M. Beattie is professor of history at Michigan State University. He is coeditor for the disciplines of history and social sciences for the Luso-Brazilian Review.

Maude Beaudry-Cyr is a graduate student at the University of South Florida. Her research interests include criminological theory, racial/ethnic disparities in the juvenile justice system, and sex offender continuity and recidivism.

Kevin M. Beaver is a professor in the College of Criminology and Criminal Justice at Florida State University and a visiting distinguished professor in the Center for Social and Humanities Research at King Abdulaziz University. His research focuses on examining the biosocial contributors to antisocial behaviors across the life course.

Guy Beker is a researcher at the Center for the Study of Society, University of Haifa, and a lecturer in the University of Haifa Criminology School. His research interests are psychopathy and antisocial behavior, organized crime and terror connections, and cybercrime.

Kerry Beldin is an assistant professor at the University of Nebraska at Omaha's Grace Abbott's School of Social Work. Her teaching, research, and service activities focus on the professional responses to violence against women in the community.

Brenda Sims Blackwell is professor and chair of the Department of Criminal Justice and Criminology at Georgia Southern University. Her research broadly focuses on women and crime, with specific interests in gender differences in offending and differences in criminal justice responses to male and female offenders. Her work has examined and elaborated traditional and new theoretical perspectives, concentrating on their relevance for female offending. Dr Blackwell has collaborated on projects funded by the National Institute of Justice and the Governor's Office for Children and Families that examined responses to the commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC).

Kristie R. Blevins is associate professor in the School of Justice Studies at Eastern Kentucky University. She received her PhD in Criminal Justice from the University of Cincinnati. Her research interests include crime prevention, corrections, school safety, and the occupational reactions of criminal justice employees. Her recent work can be found in the Journal of Offender Rehabilitation, Criminal Justice Policy Review, American Journal of Criminal Justice, Deviant Behavior, and International Journal of Police Science and Management. She has also coauthored several book chapters and coedited Taking stock: The status of criminological theory and transformative justice: Critical and peacemaking themes influenced by Richard Quinney.

Steven Block is assistant professor in the Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice, Central Connecticut State University in New Britain, CT. His primary research interests include crime data, crime prevention, and motor vehicle theft. He has recently published articles on motor vehicle theft in Crime Prevention and Community Safety, Journal of Research in Crime and Delinquency, and Western Criminology Review.

John H. Boman, IV is an assistant professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at the University of Wyoming. He received his PhD from the University of Florida in 2013. His research interests primarily focus on the influence of friends on crime, how this influence changes over the life course, gender, construct validation, and measurement. Some of this recent research appears in Crime and Delinquency, Criminal Justice and Behavior, Deviant Behavior, and the Journal of Youth and Adolescence.

Brenda J. Bond is associate professor of public service at Suffolk University where she studies the management and performance of police organizations. Her research and consulting with police organizations center on organizational change and development, strategic management, and collaborative approaches to community safety. Brenda serves as a subject matter expert for a number of national policing initiatives for the Bureau of Justice Assistance. She received her PhD from the Heller School for Social Policy and Management at Brandeis University.

Stephanie Bontrager Ryon is an assistant professor in the School of Public Affairs at the University of Colorado Colorado Springs. Her research areas focus on criminal justice processing of disadvantaged populations, human trafficking, and effective programs in juvenile justice.

Brian B. Boutwell is an associate professor of criminology and criminal justice at Saint Louis University. Currently, his research interests include behavioral genetics, human intelligence, life-course criminology, and evolutionary psychology. His published works have appeared in a number of academic journals, including Developmental Psychology, PLOS ONE, Intelligence, Behavior Genetics, Criminology, and Aggressive Behavior.

Lisa C. Bowman-Bowen is an interim faculty member in the Department of Criminal Justice and Criminology at Sam Houston State University. Her dissertation, titled "Answers to Questions: Do Words Matter? A Comparison of Methods, Distributions, and Correlated Data for Three Surveys: Monitoring the Future, National Survey on Drug Use and Health, National Youth Survey Family Study," was completed in 2014. Her research interests focus on survey methodology, juvenile problem behaviors, and behavioral modification for at-risk youth utilizing community-based methods and residential ranching.

Nicholas Branic is a doctoral student at the University of California, Irvine and previously earned his master's degree from the University of South Florida. His research focuses on the neighborhood context of crime, including aspects of the built environment, neighborhood change over time, and social inequalities. In addition to his doctoral studies, Nicholas works as a research assistant in the Irvine Lab for the Study of Space and Crime (ILSSC) at the University of California, Irvine.

Eric Bronson is associate professor and director of the Criminal Justice program at Lamar University, Texas State University, specializing in corrections.

Joe M. Brown is an assistant professor of criminal justice at Fayetteville State University. Professor Brown earned his PhD from the Department of Juvenile Justice at Prairie View A&M University. His research interests include juvenile sentencing, alternative schools, and reentry.

Wyatt Brown is a doctoral student in the Department of Criminology at the University of South Florida.

Sandra M. Bucerius is an assistant professor of sociology and criminology at the Department of Sociology at the University of Alberta. She has published widely on issues around immigration, drug dealing, crime, and ethnography. Among others, she is the author of Unwanted – Muslim immigrants, dignity, and drug dealing (2014), and coeditor of The Oxford handbook on ethnicity, immigration and crime (with Michael Tonry, 2013).

Hoan N. Bui is associate professor in the Department of Sociology, University of Tennessee at Knoxville. She earned a PhD degree in social sciences with a concentration in criminology and criminal justice at Michigan State University. Her research interests include immigration adaptation and crime, intimate partner violence, and prisoner reentry. Her work emphasizes social class, gender, race, and ethnicity as factors that influence the likelihood of crime victimization and offending as well as reentry experience.

Amy Bunn is a graduate student in the School of Public Affairs at the University of Colorado Colorado Springs. Her research areas focus on mental illness and crime, intimate partner violence, and behavioral analysis.

Bryan Burton is an assistant professor of political science and criminal justice at Southern Utah University. His research focuses on white-collar crime, Medicare fraud, and health care policy. His recent publications include works on health care data, published in The Open Health Services and Policy Journal.

Corey Burton is a doctoral student in criminology and criminal justice at the University of South Carolina. Corey earned his BA in political science from the University of Louisville in 2007 and his MS in justice administration from the University of Louisville in 2012. His research interests include the death penalty and criminal procedure. Corey previously served three years as a uniformed officer with the United States Secret Service from 2007 to 2010 and has presented numerous research papers at regional and national academic conferences.

James Byrne is a professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at the University of Massachusetts Lowell, and an adjunct professor in the Key Centre for Ethics, Law, Justice and Governance, School of Criminology and Criminal Justice, Griffith University. He has been teaching at the University of Massachusetts Lowell, since 1984. Dr Byrne's research interests include institutional culture, intermediate sanctions, offender reentry, violent crime, and the effectiveness of various forms of offender treatment and control.

Jesse Cale completed his PhD in 2010 in the School of Criminology at Simon Fraser University in Vancouver, Canada. He spent three years as a research fellow at the Key Centre for Ethics, Law, Justice and Governance at Griffith University in Brisbane, Australia, and is currently a lecturer at the University of New South Wales in Sydney, Australia. His main areas of research interest are sexual offenders and offenses, developmental and life-course criminology, and crime prevention and social policy.

Jack E. Call is professor of criminal justice at Radford University. He teaches courses on criminal law, criminal procedure, and the courts. His most recent publications, in the American Journal of Criminal Justice, have dealt with the impact of recent Supreme Court decisions on police practices. Dr Call is also coeditor of the online journal The Virginia Police Legal Bulletin.

Jocelyn Camacho is a master's student at the University of South Florida. Her research interests include corrections, green crime, social justice, popular culture, and critical theory.

Michael F. Campagna is a doctoral candidate at Washington State University in the Department of Criminal Justice and Criminology. His research interests include corrections, criminology, and risk management.

Andrea Cantora is an assistant professor at the University of Baltimore, School of Criminal Justice. She received her PhD from the City University of New York City/John Jay College of Criminal Justice. Her research focuses on incarceration, prison reentry, the impact of incarceration on communities, and urban crime prevention.

Michael Capece is a professor of criminal justice at Valdosta State University and a licensed psychotherapist in Georgia and Florida. He received his PhD from the University of Florida.

Joel Capellan is presently a doctoral candidate in the Criminal Justice Department at the CUNY Graduate Center and John Jay College. He specializes in the quantitative and spatial analysis of social phenomena. Substantively, his interests range from mass murder to state-sponsored human rights violations. Joel's most recent research focuses on the application of geographically weighted regression models to examine nonstationarity in local repression models and the effects of precinct and neighborhood conditions on variations in recent patterns of stop and frisk practice in New York City.

Christopher R. Capsambelis is associate professor of criminology at the University of Tampa. His research interests include police selection and promotion and rural policing.

Carlos A. Carcach is a professor of statistics and econometrics at the Escuela Superior de Economía y Negocios, El Salvador.

Jason T. Carmichael is associate professor of sociology at McGill University in Montreal, Quebec, Canada. His research agenda centers on how sociopolitical arraignments influence punishment and other mechanisms of formal social control. The subjects of his research have included, among other things: the use and legality of the death penalty; factors contributing to jail and prison use; and determinants of metropolitan police force size and the incarceration of juvenile offenders in adult prisons.

Elizabeth Cass is an instructor and graduate coordinator in the Department of Criminology at the University of South Florida.

Michael S. Caudy is an assistant professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at the University of Texas at San Antonio. His primary research interests include correctional interventions for justice-involved individuals with substance use, mental health, and co-occurring disorders; evidence-based community corrections; and the relationship between race, crime, and criminal justice sanctioning.

Vania Ceccato is an associate professor at the School of Architecture and the Built Environment, Royal Institute of Technology (KTH) in Stockholm, Sweden. Her research interests are the geography of crime, safety and gender, quantitative methods, and spatial data analysis. She has conducted research on spatial patterns of crime in Scandinavia, Brazil, the United Kingdom, and the Baltic countries of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, particularly on the relation between crime and socioeconomic neighborhood dynamics and land use characteristics. Her current research projects deal with transit crime, safety and the housing market, safety in rural areas, space-time variations of crime and people's routine activity, women's mobility, and the nature of rape places. She has published in international journals, mostly in criminology, geography, and urban planning. She is the author of the books Rural crime and community safety (2015), Moving safely: Crime and perceived safety in Stockholm's subway stations (2013), editor of the book The urban fabric of crime and fear (2012), and coeditor of Safety and security in transit environments: An interdisciplinary approach (2015).

Aaron Chalfin is a researcher at the University of Chicago Crime Lab. His current research examines the effect of police on crime and the extent to which there is a relationship between crime and unauthorized immigration. His past research has considered both the cost and the deterrent effect of capital punishment, the relationship between unemployment and crime, and the degree to which DNA evidence can be used to solve residential burglaries. He is also interested in research that advances social science research methods and has written on topics such as measurement errors in observational data and cost-benefit analysis. Aaron received his PhD in 2013 from the Richard and Rhoda Goldman School of Public Policy at the University of California, Berkeley.

Christine J. Champion is a doctoral student in criminology, law and society at the School of Social Ecology, University of California, Irvine. Ms Champion earned her MAS in criminology, law and society from the School of Social Ecology, University of California, Irvine. Her research interests include large-scale white-collar crimes such as control fraud, cybercrime, corporate ethics, and the role of finance and economics in creating criminogenic conditions.

Heng Choon (Oliver) Chan is an assistant professor of criminology at City University of Hong Kong. He received his PhD in criminology from the University of South Florida, and was selected as a “2012 Outstanding Criminology Ambassador Award” recipient by his alma mater. Oliver earned his bachelor's degree in psychology and master's degree in forensic psychology. In 2014, he was awarded the honorary title “Early Career Award” by the Hong Kong Research Grants Council of the University Grant Committee for his outstanding and successful application for a competitive grant. His research focuses on sexual homicide, offender profiling, sex offending, homicide, stalking behavior, and criminological issues related to the Asian population. He has published extensively on these topics. His latest single-authored monograph on sexual homicide offenders was published in mid-2015 by Palgrave Macmillan. He sits on a number of refereed journal editorial boards and is a reviewer for many refereed journals and academic publishers.

Chien-Min Chen is professor and deputy president of academic affairs at National Kinmen (Quemoy) University, Taiwan. He also acts as dean in the Academy of Social Sciences at the National Kinmen University. He holds a PhD from the Chinese Culture University of Taiwan. His interests and areas of research include tourism management, service quality, and Asian studies. He has published in the Journal of Policing: An International Journal of Police Strategies & Management, Journal of Sustainable Tourism, Tourism Management, International Journal of Tourism Research, Asia Pacific Journal of Tourism Research, and International Journal of Hospitality and Tourism Administration.

Sriram Chintakrindi is a criminologist and an assistant professor in the Criminal Justice department at California State University, Stanislaus. He has a PhD in criminal justice from the CUNY Graduate Center and John Jay College of Criminal Justice. Dr Chintakrindi is currently working on a study examining employment and gross income outcomes for probationers with substance use and criminal histories. He is a managing editor for the Journal of Spatial Demography. Previously, he worked with his mentor Dr Jeremy Porter on examining the relationship between low self-control and post-treatment outcomes related to substance use and recidivism for a sample of parolees. Also, he has previously published research findings on the recidivism rates for individuals with mental health disorders sentenced to the Transitional Case Management program at the Center for Alternative Sentencing and Employment Services (CASES) in the Journal of Psychiatric Services. His research interests include mental health, substance use, mass-incarceration, reentry, and criminological theory testing.

Sue Carter Collins is an associate professor in the Department of Criminal Justice and Criminology at Georgia State University in Atlanta, Georgia, where she teaches constitutional law and criminal procedure. She holds three degrees from Florida State University: a BS in criminology and corrections, a JD, and a PhD in criminology and criminal justice. She also holds an MS degree in criminal justice administration for Rollins College. Dr Collins is a socio-legal researcher whose interests and publications focus on sexual harassment, the USA Patriot Act, and contemporary legal issues in policing. She is a veteran police trainer and management legal consultant with more than 35 years of experience in criminal justice.

Megan Comfort is a senior research sociologist at RTI International and an adjunct assistant professor of medicine at the University of California, San Francisco. She is the author of Doing time together: Love and family in the shadow of the prison (University of Chicago Press, 2008). Her research interests include the repercussive effects of incarceration on health, family relationships, and socioeconomic well-being.

Nadine M. Connell is an assistant professor in the Criminology Program at the University of Texas at Dallas. She earned her doctoral degree in criminology and criminal justice at the University of Maryland at College Park in 2006. She has published several peer-reviewed articles in major criminology and sociology journals. Her major research interests include the criminalization of delinquency, delinquency intervention and prevention programming, and methodological advances in program and policy evaluation.

Heith Copes is professor in the Department of Justice Sciences at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. His primary research uses qualitative methods to explore the ways in which offenders make sense of their crimes. He earned his PhD in sociology from the University of Tennessee.

Michele W. Covington is an assistant professor of criminal justice at the University of South Carolina Upstate. She earned her PhD from the University of Central Florida, and her research interests include policing, violence and homicide, geographical crime analysis, and women and crime.

Jeanette M. Daly is an associate research scientist in the Department of Family Medicine, University of Iowa. Her research focus has been on the legislation of elder abuse and its association with human services resources and the criminal justice system.

Megan L. Davidson is assistant professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at East Carolina University. Her research focuses on examining criminal justice responses to special populations of offenders, such as those suffering with mental illnesses, substance abuse issues, and/or homelessness. She is particularly interested in evaluating the effectiveness of jail diversion programs, corrections-based rehabilitation programs, and reentry initiatives targeting these special populations of offenders. She completed her PhD in public affairs with a criminal justice concentration at the University of Central Florida. She obtained her BA in psychology and her BS/MS in justice administration from the University of Louisville.

Jason L. Davis is an assistant professor of criminal justice and sociology at Clayton State University.

Cherie Dawson-Edwards is an associate professor in the Department of Justice Administration at the University of Louisville. She serves as immediate past president of the board of directors of the American Civil Liberties Union of Kentucky (ACLU-KY) and on the statewide Subcommittee for Equity and Justice for All Youth (SEJAY). Her most recent publications can be found in Criminal Justice Studies and Professional Issues in Criminal Justice.

Nishi P. Dayal is a senior at Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey. Moving forward she plans to complete a law degree, while studying for her master's degree in social work/sociology. She has studied abroad in Italy and New Zealand and plans to travel next year for humane work prior to entering school. Her major is criminal justice and her minors are sociology and history.

Mathieu Deflem is professor of sociology at the University of South Carolina. His research and teaching interests are situated in the areas of sociology of law, social control, policing, terrorism and counterterrorism, popular culture, and social theory.

Jessica Deitzer is a master's student at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. She is currently researching the way women methamphetamine users construct identities as functional users.

Chris Delcher is a research assistant professor in the Department of Health Outcomes & Policy at the University of Florida. His work focuses on the evaluation of prescription drug monitoring programs designed to reduce drug abuse.

Matt DeLisi is professor and coordinator of criminal justice studies and faculty affiliate of the Center for the Study of Violence at Iowa State University. The editor-in-chief of Journal of Criminal Justice, Professor DeLisi has published approximately 300 scholarly works since earning his doctorate in 2000. A founding member of the Biosocial Criminology Research Group, his research focuses on the biosocial causes and correlates of pathological antisocial behavior. In 2012, Professor DeLisi received the prestigious Fellow Award from the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences.

Richard Dembo is professor of criminology at the University of South Florida. He has published widely on issues relating to juvenile justice, and risk and protective factors relating to youth drug use and delinquency. He has a long-term involvement in implementing and evaluating intervention services to help troubled youth, particularly those involved in the justice system, and their families.

Jason A. Dobrow is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Criminology at the University of South Florida. His research interests include psychopathy and personality disorders as they relate to criminal activity, lying and deception, and the intersection of the world of sports and criminal behavior.

Kimberly D. Dodson is an associate professor and graduate coordinator in the School of Law Enforcement and Justice Administration at Western Illinois University. Her research primarily focuses on evidence-based assessments of correctional programs and policies. She currently serves as the secretary of the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences Minorities and Women section and the secretary for the Midwest Criminal Justice Association.

Diana S. Dolliver is an assistant professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at the University of Alabama. Dr Dolliver's areas of expertise include examining sociocultural aspects of cyber-crime, transnational organized crime, and drug trafficking, and the existing links between these criminal phenomena. Her areas of research also include matters of policing and police use of force in the United States and in Eastern Europe. She has presented her research internationally, to include conferences in Poland and China. Dr Dolliver enjoys working closely with members of law enforcement in the United States and abroad, in addition to collaborating with scholars from around the world on issues of comparative crime.

Christopher M. Donner is an assistant professor of criminal justice at Loyola University Chicago, and he holds a PhD in criminology from the University of South Florida. Dr Donner's primary areas of research are in American law enforcement, police misconduct, and the United States Supreme Court. His work has appeared in peer-reviewed journals, such as the American Journal of Criminal Justice, Journal of Criminal Justice, and Police Quarterly.

Christopher Dowling is a PhD candidate in the School of Criminology and Criminal Justice at Griffith University in Brisbane, Australia. His main areas of research are adolescent and adult sexual offending and environmental criminology.

Laura Dugan is professor of criminology and criminal justice at the University of Maryland. Her main area of research is policy and violence.

Grant Duwe is the director of research and evaluation for the Minnesota Department of Corrections, where he evaluates correctional programs, develops risk assessment instruments, and forecasts the state's prison population. He is the author of the book, Mass murder in the United States: A history, and his recent work has been published in Journal of Criminal Justice, Criminology & Public Policy, Criminal Justice Policy Review, Criminal Justice Review, Crime & Delinquency, and Sexual Abuse: A Journal of Research and Treatment.

John M. Eassey is an assistant professor in the Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice at Missouri State University. His research interests include the role of peers in the developmental study of crime, neighborhood and contextual influences, and statistical and research methodology.

Rebecca Eichelberger is a doctoral student in criminology at the University of Texas at Dallas. She has an MS in justice policy from the University of Texas at San Antonio. Her current research interests include biosocial criminology, human trafficking, community corrections, runaway/homeless youth, and race and gender issues in criminology. Rebecca currently works for the United States Department of Health and Human Services, but has also worked as an assistant facility administrator, program specialist for the State of Texas, and a juvenile probation officer.

Tomer Einat is a lecturer at the Department of Criminology, Bar-Ilan University, and a visitor scholar at the Institute of Criminology, Cambridge University. His research interests are penology, corrections, prisons and alternatives to incarceration, and punitive policy.

Kingsley Ejiogu is assistant professor of criminal justice at the Huston-Tillotson University. He earned his PhD from the School of Public Affairs at the Texas Southern University in Houston, Texas. His research interests include theoretical criminology, comparative criminal justice policy, and the application of geospatial technologies to crime mapping and the governance of crime spaces.

Tom Ellis is principal lecturer at the Institute of Criminal Justice Studies at the University of Portsmouth, England. His areas of expertise include Japanese criminal justice, youth justice, prisons, race, diversity and criminal justice; he sits on the Ministry of Justice's Race Statistics Advisory Board. Until 1999 he worked for the Home Office Research, Development and Statistics Directorate, and also had a two-year spell at UNICRI in Rome. His current research is on the evaluation of body-worn video cameras.

David P. Farrington is emeritus professor of psychological criminology and Leverhulme Trust emeritus fellow in the Institute of Criminology, Cambridge University. He received the Stockholm Prize in Criminology, and the Freda Adler Distinguished Scholar Award of the American Society of Criminology Division of International Criminology, in 2013. He is chair of the ASC Division of Developmental and Life-Course Criminology. His major research interest is in developmental criminology, and he is director of the Cambridge Study in Delinquent Development, a prospective longitudinal survey of over 400 London males from age 8 to age 56. In addition to over 600 published journal articles and book chapters on criminological and psychological topics, he has published nearly 100 books, monographs, and government reports.

Averi Fegadel is a master's student in the College of Behavioral and Community Sciences in the Department of Criminology at the University of South Florida. Her research interests include psychopathy, family violence, and homicide studies.

Gloria Fernández-Pacheco is assistant professor and coordinator of the MSc degree in criminology at University Fernando Pessoa, Porto (Portugal). She is developing research projects about "Restorative Justice in the Juvenile Justice System," part of the coordination of the research teams from Portugal, Spain, and the United Kingdom; furthermore, she is a member of an ISRD-3 Portuguese team, an international research project about self-reported juvenile delinquency.

Matthew D. Fetzer is an assistant professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at Shippensburg University in Pennsylvania. His research interests include juvenile delinquency, homicide, domestic violence, and hate crime.

Chuck Fields has been professor of justice studies in the College of Justice and Safety at Eastern Kentucky University since 1997. He has a PhD (1984) in criminal justice theory from Sam Houston State University. His primary research interests include comparative and international justice systems and international drug policy.

Mary A. Finn is professor of criminal justice at Michigan State University. She earned her PhD from the School of Criminal Justice at the University at Albany. Her research interests include evaluation of public policies that seek to reduce violence against women and children.

Michael Fischer obtained his PhD from the State University of New York at Albany in 1989, where he studied under Travis Hirschi, Michael Gottfredson, Terence Thornberry, Graeme Newman, and Hans Toch. Dr Fischer obtained his master of social work and master of science degrees in educational psychology and methodology from the University at Albany. Dr Fischer has been a moderator, presenter, discussant, or chair for 41 panels and roundtables in 2010, 2011, 2012, and 2013 with the American Society of Criminology, Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences, and Southern Criminal Justice Association. In 2003–2004 he completed Drug Court Planning Initiative training as a drug court evaluator. Dr Fischer was a military policeman in the US Army from 1972 to 1975 and completed the New York Basic Course for Police Officers in Bronx, New York, in 1976. Dr Fischer has published books, chapters in books, and articles on juvenile delinquency, offender rehabilitation, women and crime, and policy in criminal justice.

Bonnie S. Fisher is a professor in the School of Criminal Justice at the University of Cincinnati where she is also a graduate fellow. Her research interests span a range of victimological issues, with her primary focus on violence against college women and the effectiveness of prevention strategies. Her work has been published in Criminology, Justice Quarterly, Violence Against Women, Women and Criminal Justice, and Journal of Interpersonal Violence. In 2012, the University of Cincinnati awarded her the George Rieveschl Jr. Award for Creative and/or Scholarly Works. From 2011 to 2013, she served on the National Academy of Sciences Panel on Measuring Rape and Sexual Assault in BJS Household Surveys.

Bryanna Hahn Fox is an assistant professor in the Department of Criminology at the University of South Florida. She is the recent recipient of the 2013 Excellence in Law Enforcement Research Award from the International Association of Chiefs of Police for her evidence-based offender profile of burglary. She is a former visiting scholar at the Federal Bureau of Investigation's Behavioral Science Unit, and former fellow of the Cambridge University Trusts. Her research interests involve the identification and evaluation of psychological and developmental risk factors for criminal behavior, as well as the use of evidence-based methods and experimental designs in criminological and policing research.

Andrew Franz received a BA degree from Austin College in Sherman, Texas. He holds a JD from Tulane Law School. He practiced in the field of criminal law for 11 years; first as an assistant Air Force Judge Advocate General, and then as both an indigent contract bid and privately retained defender in Mississippi and in military cases. Instructor Franz has been involved in teaching criminal justice and criminology full time for the past ten years. He has given numerous speeches regarding constitutional rights and due process throughout his career, and presented papers on legal theory, due process, environmental law, and rule of law at over 15 conferences. He has received extended scholarship grants from Vermont Law School and the National Endowment for Humanities. Currently he holds the rank of instructor in the Criminology Department at the University of South Florida where he teaches a wide array of courses. He has published a number of articles, reviews, book chapters, and encyclopedia entries pertaining to criminal law and sociology of law. Instructor Franz holds membership in a number of relevant professional, academic, and legal associations.

Brian J. Frederick is a cultural criminologist and postgraduate research fellow in the Erasmus Mundus Doctorate in Global and Cultural Criminology program at the School of Social Policy, Sociology & Social Research (SSPSSR) at the University of Kent (Canterbury, England) and at the Institut für Kriminologische Sozialforschung (IKS) at the Universität Hamburg (Hamburg, Germany).

Robert R. Friedmann is professor emeritus of criminal justice. He served as chair, Department of Criminal Justice (1989–2002), held the Distinguished Chair of Public Safety Partnerships (2007–2010), and is founding director, Georgia International Law Enforcement Exchange, at Georgia State University's Andrew Young School of Policy Studies, Atlanta, Georgia.

Katarina S. M. Fritzson is an associate professor at Bond University. Her PhD on malicious firesetting was undertaken in the United Kingdom and, following the completion of her PhD, she was appointed to an expert panel and provided regular advice to police inquiries into arson offenses in the United Kingdom and overseas. Katarina has also been involved in the development of psychological treatment programs for adults who set fires, and in 2012 she set up the Australian Centre for Arson Research and Treatment (ACART) at Bond University.

Tammy S. Garland is an associate professor at the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga where she teaches courses in victimology, juvenile justice, media and crime, and drugs and crime. She received a PhD in criminal justice from Sam Houston State University in 2004. Her current research emphasis includes victimization of the homeless, women, and children, popular culture, and drug policy issues. Her publications can be found in American Journal of Criminal Justice, Criminal Justice Policy Review, Criminal Justice Studies, and Journal of Poverty.

Jacinta M. Gau is an associate professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at the University of Central Florida. Her research focuses on police–community relations, with an emphasis on procedural justice, police legitimacy, and racial issues.

Adam Ghazi-Tehrani is a PhD candidate at the University of California at Irvine. His research focuses on white-collar and cybercrimes. His recent publications include works on white-collar crime in China, published in Crime, Law & Social Change.

Lane Kirkland Gillespie is an assistant professor of criminal justice at Boise State University. Dr Gillespie earned her PhD in criminology from the University of South Florida. Her research focuses on violence and victimization, including the relationship between gender and crime, intimate partner violence, corporate victimization, and the role of the victim in criminal justice processes.

Lance E. Gilmore is currently a graduate student in the Department of Criminology at the University of South Florida.

Aviva Twersky Glasner is an associate professor of criminal justice at Bridgewater State University.

Dawn Glenn is a professor at Cleveland State Community College and the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga. She earned her MS from the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, and her main research interests include juvenile justice, domestic violence, violence in America, serial killers, and corrections.

Craig Goforth, assistant vice president for enrollment management (former assistant VP for student development division/dean of students), has been with Mars Hill University for 25 years in Admissions and various student life functions, where he has taught a variety of criminal justice courses such as Policing in America, Victimology, and Legal Aspects of Criminal Justice. Dr Goforth has been a sworn law enforcement officer (current) for over 27 years, having earned the advanced certificate from the NC Criminal Justice Standards Commission, and is a fraud investigator for commodities for the government. He was a former military police officer in the US Army and served as chief of police in Mars Hill, NC.

Seana Golder is an associate professor in the Kent School of Social Work at the University of Louisville. Her research is focused on exploring the relationship between victimization, psychological distress, and substance use and how these factors affect women's overall psychosocial functioning and adjustment, particularly among justice-involved women. Her most recent publications appear in Substance Use and Misuse, Violence and Victims, and Violence Against Women.

Julio C. Gonzalez is employed as a full-time criminal investigator in the Crimes Against Persons Division/Child Abuse Unit for the Dallas Police Department. He is currently a graduate student at the University of Texas at Dallas studying criminology. He earned his bachelor's degree from Texas Tech University in 2006.

Angela R. Gover is a professor and director of the Undergraduate Program in Criminal Justice in the School of Public Affairs at the University of Colorado Denver. Her research interests include gender and crime, intimate partner violence, and the criminal justice system's response to violence against women. Her work has recently appeared in Violence and Victims, Journal of Interpersonal Violence, and Justice Quarterly.

O. Hayden Griffin, III is an assistant professor in the Department of Justice Sciences at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. He has a PhD in criminology, law, and society from the University of Florida and a JD from the T.C. Williams School of Law at the University of Richmond. His research interests are drug policy, law and society, and corrections. His research has been published in Deviant Behavior, Journal of Drug Issues, and American Journal of Criminal Justice.

Mark Griffiths is professor of gambling studies at the International Gaming Research Unit, Psychology Division at Nottingham Trent University.

Elizabeth L. Grossi is an associate professor in the Department of Justice Administration at the University of Louisville. Her teaching and research interests include criminological theory, family violence, racial profiling, and correctional treatment programs.

Colleen Hackett is an assistant professor in the Department of Sociology at Colorado State University, Pueblo. Her areas of interest include social control, governance, culture and punishment, gender, and therapeutic rehabilitation programming.

Koichi Hamai graduated from Waseda University in 1984. He worked in the Ministry of Justice, in the area of offenders' rehabilitation, until 2003. He was also seconded to the United Nations office in Italy as a research officer for two years during his service in government. His research has focused on crime and criminal justice statistics and on the rehabilitation of offenders. He is the author of about 80 national and international publications. He currently holds a position as professor of law at Ryukoku University in Kyoto.

Wim Hardyns received his PhD in criminology from Ghent University in 2010. He is a postdoctoral fellow of the Research Foundation – Flanders (FWO) and is associated to the Institute of Urban Security & Policing Studies (Ghent University). He is professor of criminology at the Department of Criminology (Free University of Brussels). He is interested in the social ecology of (fear of) crime, measurement issues in survey research, safety and security, and sport-related crimes. Some of his articles have appeared in the European Journal of Criminology and the British Journal of Criminology. He is assistant editor of the European Journal of Policing Studies (EJPS).

Dee Wood Harper is professor emeritus of criminology and sociology, Loyola University New Orleans. His research and publications have covered a wide range of topics, including tourist crime victimization, robbery, violence, including homicide and homicide followed by suicide. His most recent book (with Kelly Frailing) is Fundamentals of criminology: New dimensions (Carolina Academic Press, 2013).

Jennifer L. Hartman is an associate professor of criminal justice and criminology at the UNC at Charlotte. She received her PhD from the University of Cincinnati. Her research interests center around gendered violence and effective interventions for offenders and the assessment of correctional programs. She has served as a consultant to agencies providing technical assistance for adults and youth on best practices for gendered violence, risk/need assessments, and cognitive-behavioral interventions. She has published in Crime and Delinquency, Victims and Offenders, and Journal of Criminal Justice Education.

John Mikael Hawron was born in Hong Kong to missionary parents and lived in Europe and Mexico before going to the United States at age 8. He earned the Associate's degree in criminal justice from Texarkana College before spending three years in the United States Army, including a combat tour in Iraq. He attended Texas A&M University–Texarkana where he earned his BA in criminal justice and MS in interdisciplinary studies with concentration in criminal justice. He is currently employed by International Paper – Texarkana Mill.

Theresa C. Hayden is an associate professor of criminal justice at the University of Louisville. Professor Hayden earned her PhD from the Kent School of Social Work at the University of Louisville. Her research interests include human trafficking, family/domestic violence, human rights, and health disparities.

Rebecca M. Hayes is associate professor in the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work at Central Michigan University. Driven by her passion for social justice, particularly eradicating violence against women, she assisted with starting the first rape recovery nonprofit organization in St Lucia, PROSAF – Surviving Sexual Abuse in the Caribbean. You can find her scholarly work published in academic journals such as Feminist Criminology, Crime & Delinquency, Critical Criminology, and Violence Against Women.

Anita Heber is associate professor at the Department of Criminology, Stockholm University, Sweden. Her main research interests are fear of crime, victimology, and organized crime. She has published a number of books, reports, and articles on these subjects.

Kathleen M. Heide is professor of criminology at the University of South Florida, Tampa. Dr Heide, a licensed mental health professional, is an internationally recognized consultant on adolescent homicide and family violence and a court-appointed expert in matters relating to homicide, children, and families.