

BORN TO BE WILD

The Rise of the American Motorcyclist

RANDY D. McBEE

"This book is at once a social history of the motorcycle and a provocation for rethinking the political realignments of the second half of the twentieth century. A rich sense of contradiction and a deep understanding of how political struggle can inflect the same slogans and themes with widely divergent meanings together elevate this book beyond a useful and interesting study of a hobby into a profound rumination on the role of culture in political life."

—GEORGE LIPSITZ, University of California, Santa Barbara

"Born to Be Wild offers the definitive history of motorcycling in post-World War II America. Drawing on meticulous primary research with great nuance and depth, Randy McBee provides a compelling and valuable corrective to books and films that have exploited minor, salacious incidents sparked by a minority of motorcyclists. His book will be an indispensable resource for scholars of motorcycling. Given its sustained attention to the complexities of gender, race, class, and ethnicity, Born to Be Wild should also be required reading for historians, sociologists, transportation enthusiasts, and anyone interested in about this transformative period in American history."

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Many people have contributed to this project. David Roediger, Barbara Hahn, Ron Milam, Jacynnda Ammons, and Cindy Willett read parts of the manuscript or helped me sort out other details. Don Troop, Michael Lichter, and Jack and Pat Jamison were kind enough to share their photographs. Sean Cunningham spoke with me on numerous occasions about politics and the Right. Thanks as well to the anonymous readers for UNC Press. Their comments and suggestions significantly helped me fine-tune the manuscript and expand its scope and argument. I also want to thank Christopher Thrasher, one of my Ph.D. students who worked for me as a research assistant. He has a real knack for finding things, and some of the evidence that appears in the manuscript would not have been discovered if not for him. Don Hennigan, another student of mine, also contributed to this project in countless ways and was always willing to share his vast knowledge of motorcycling. I also cannot imagine having a better editor than Brandon Proia. From the start he has been supportive, quick to answer any questions, and just plain smart. He not only has been a delight to work with but understands the project and helped push it in ways that made it better. Many thanks as well to Mary Carley Caviness, who helped finalize numerous details toward the end of the process, and to Brian MacDonald, whose copyediting was invaluable.

I also owe a special thanks to the many motorcyclists I talked with over the years and the motorcyclists/scholars connected to the International Journal of Motorcycle Studies. The journal has been up and running for a decade, and I have benefited in countless ways from the men and women who have supported it over the years. I am particularly grateful to Steven Alford and Suzanne Ferriss. Suzanne was one of the founding editors of the journal, and she and Steven have coedited the journal for most of its existence. This book has benefited enormously from their years of riding, their insightful comments, and their constant support. They both read the entire manuscript, some parts more than once, and they were also generous with their time to answer my questions, fill in details, or simply point me in the right direction. Their influence on my work is evident, and I think it's better because of them.

I also want to thank my wife, Julie Willett. Her own work in women's/ gender/labor history kept me thinking differently about the project, and her comments were always spot on, even though I often struggled to recognize that. Finally, my kids, Dylan and Chloe, did little to help me with this project, except of course to provide their constant support and love.
