Acknowledgments

THERE IS no end to the list of persons who contributed, each in some way, to the writing of this book. Essentially, it is the product of very long weeks and hours spent in the urban struggle. And there are many, many persons who have shared that struggle with me. They begin with my wife, Mary, and my four children, who have been loving, supportive, and patient. And they end with a tolerant and understanding electorate, which has now returned me to the struggle.

Most especially, for the assistance I have had in the writing, rewriting, and writing again of this book, my thanks go to my assistant, Jeff Greenfield, to my press secretary, Thomas Morgan, and to a small staff of young mayoral assistants who inexhaustibly, each day and night, with skill and good humor, put business before pleasure.

There are, also, two very old friends, Evan Thomas and Eric Swenson, who have published this book, and who, too, have lived these long years with me.

Finally, my thanks go to Richard Aurelio, my campaign manager in the 1969 campaign for Mayor, who held the ship together in the most turbulent seas I have yet sailed.
