The Story of BLACK PANTHER

Growing up in a royal family wasn't always easy for Prince T'Challa. There was great pressure to live up to^① the legacy of his father, T'Chaka, the respected King of Wakanda. T'Chaka was also leader of the ancient Panther Clan, a role passed down for generations^②. Everything changed the day an outsider named ULYSSES KLAW arrived in Wakanda. He wanted to steal the country's resources for his own evil purpose. Klaw attacked T'Chaka, hitting him with one fatal blow^①. The loss of T'Chaka left the royal family heartbroken. As he grew older, T'Challa learned not to dwell on^② the past. His calling was to become more than just a prince. He loved science. He studied hard to become a thinker and trained his mind and body to work together. T'Challa studied fighting techniques and used a unique heart-shaped herb that gave him enhanced abilities. After inventing an impenetrable^③ suit made of a powerful element called VIBRANIUM, T'Challa was ready to inherit his father's title. His metamorphosis^④ into a hero

BLACK PANTHER

CHAPTER

you are here

In the heart of Wakanda sat a large mountain known as the Great Mound. The area held the nation's greatest resource: VIBRANIUM. This incredible^①, sound-absorbing metal had been the source of Wakanda's advanced technology for centuries. Wakandans working in the mines considered it an honor to be chosen for such a role. Today, however, many of them did not feel very honored.

“Look out!” a miner shouted.

① incredible adj. 非同寻常的

An explosion rocked the Great Mound as the White Gorilla Cultists stormed the area. They were led by a fearsome warlord known as M'Baku, who directed his mercenaries^① to destroy everything. Their savagery^② was known throughout Wakanda. However, their exact motives remained unclear. They hadn't stolen anything, nor had they before. Their only mission, it seemed, was to terrify.

“Run for your lives!” another miner yelled.

Terrified workers scattered in all directions as cultists ravaged the area. Pandemonium^③ overtook the Mound as miners desperately defended themselves against the brutal attack.

A cultist raised his spear high into the air above an innocent miner, but before he could land a blow, a silent black streak darted^④ across the Great Mound at lightning speed.

It was the BLACK PANTHER, and he was angry. He pounced on^① the cultist, ripping the spear from his hand and tossing him through the air!

The fallen cultist scoffed^②. “You have no idea what’s coming.”

The ominous warning struck fear in Black Panther’s heart. Avengers business had kept him busy. He’d been spending more time outside of Wakanda than he was used to, and it left him feeling as if he didn’t know what was going on inside his own country.

“What do you want?” Black Panther growled.

“You’ll see,” the cultist sneered^①.

“Where is M’Baku?” Black Panther asked. Before he could answer, a new commotion swept through^② the Mound.

“Clear out!” a cultist roared. The cultists were retreating. They’d released a smoke bomb that coated the area in a thick cloud of fog to mask their exit.

As the smoke cleared, Black Panther was left with even more questions.

“Is everyone all right?” Black Panther asked the miners.

“No!” a voice shouted. “We are not all right!” An angry miner named Ato barreled^③ to the front of the throng.

“Speak freely, Ato, so that you may be heard,” Black Panther said.

① sneer v. 嘲笑 ② sweep through 席卷 ③ barrel v. 挤

Ato's body tensed as he described the situation.

“These White Gorilla Cultists have attacked the Great Mound three times in the past month. And for what?!” Ato shouted.

He paced back and forth with a nervous energy. “They do not steal our Vibranium. Why then do they attack? When will this violence stop?!” Ato looked at his fellow miners for approval. He hoped they, too, would speak up, but the crowd hung their heads low and remained silent.

Ato turned his attention back to Black Panther. “Where have you been, dear king? Do you not know what is happening in your own kingdom?”
