PREFACE

---

The foreign policy of the National Government of the Republic of China is based upon the termination of all the obsolete, unequal and unilateral treaties and the conclusion of new, equal and reciprocal ones to take their place. The subjects involved in this general readjustment of China's international status are many; three are of primary and immediate importance: First, tariff autonomy, secondly, extraterritoriality, and thirdly, leased territories, concessions and settlements.

During the latter part of 1928, twelve new treaties were concluded between China and the other Powers. These treaties recognised China's right to tariff autonomy. The schedules of the national tariff went into effect on February 1st, 1929. The treaties concluded with Italy, Belgium, Portugal, Spain and Denmark included clauses for the abolition of extraterritoriality from January 1st, 1930, under certain conditions. New legal codes will be promulgated during the course of this year and the Government is prepared to conclude new treaties of commerce and amity containing similar provisions with those Powers that have not yet done so.

The treaties to which this compilation is dedicated are merely the beginning of a whole series of new equal and reciprocal treaties between China and other Powers. They are the vanguard of New China's international status of equality.

Y. L. TONG

Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs.

March 20, 1929.
