PREFACE

The evolution of this book stems from the management and professional experiences of two experienced bankers who have more than 25 years of combined experience with leading global financial institutions including Goldman Sachs, JP Morgan, Citibank, and Credit Suisse. Over the years of recruiting staff at various levels, we realized that there is a worrying knowledge gap that exists in the young candidates.

As employers, we have met and interviewed many MBA candidates and young professionals who were inspired to join the global financial industry over the years. The prestige, fast-paced, exciting and jet-setting environment—are some of the “mystical” factors that seemingly attracted many talented young people to the world of investment banking and international capital markets.

Sitting across the table looking at these candidates, on many occasions, we wished they could have done a better job in preparing themselves on knowing more about industry anatomy, business culture, market knowledge, interview techniques and knowing what is expected of them during the entire interview process.

It would have been a simpler issue if efforts were the
