As 'majority' itself implies that there are more of them, they are intuitively gifted with the power to set the trend.

This trend decorates our surroundings and infiltrates our senses. Through our senses, the trend creeps into our minds.

Having breathed in the trend, we would be configured to follow the trend due to our instinctive compulsion to be influenced - just like how we are nurtured into maturity by the environment.

宿舍中的随雕系列：尺子和口香糖

Hence, the trend (or fashion) Leads us, and derives its authority from the inherent authority of the majority .

-----

With the trend being assembled out of the perception of the majority, it's its product and its CHILD . But this child is so powerful that it dictates the workings of the society and the workings of our minds whilst PARENTing our behaviors .

It is awkward being controlled by our own creation. Yet I cannot dispute the trend that overwhelms us: It may be a tyrant of our culture, It may cage our Individuality and dictates us to conform to everyone else; but its ideal is democratic.

Nobody singularly sets the trend, the society sets the trend and the society embodies people. Thus the trend belongs to the people and the trend seems to serve the people.

This gives rise to the paradox of the parent and the child — the trend is akin to the people through both of these relationships, and the people are also akin to the trend through both of these relationships.

However, there are always rebels -

Since trends are always associated with the majority, those who oppose the trend naturally become the minority that disagrees.

As trends symbolize the majority, the struggle of the minority against the trend (i.e. majority) becomes an intrinsic conflict that will always exist.
