Acknowledgments

This book is the fruit of many years of teaching and of conversations with colleagues, students, friends, and family. In articulating my project, I have benefited from the advice of Wayne C. Booth, Eugene Garver, and Walter Jost, and from their astute readings of chapters. I am grateful to Janel Mueller, Michael Murrin, Joshua Scodel, and Richard Strier for their perceptive and learned comments on a draft of the Francis Bacon chapter presented to the Renaissance Workshop at the University of Chicago. (Naturally, I remain responsible for my errors.) The students and faculty members of the Renaissance Workshop, Ancient Societies Workshop, and Rhetoric and Poetry Workshop at the University of Chicago have consistently refined and informed my thinking and have been a source of collegiality and scholarly conversation. Dennis Hutchinson graciously provided references and stimulating conversation. Andrew McNeillie, the editor at Blackwell who commissioned this volume, stimulated my ideas and provided wonderful enthusiasm. I benefited from helpful, broad-ranging anonymous readers' reports, and Blackwell Publishing kindly gave me permission to reprint most of Chapter 11, "Exemplifying deliberation: Cicero's De officiis and Machiavelli's Prince," from A Companion to Rhetoric and Rhetorical Criticism (2004), pp. 173–89. Professors John Boyer, Dean of the College, and Dennis Hutchinson, Master of the New Collegiate Division, at the University of Chicago have been unfailing sources of support and encouragement as well as granting a course reduction so that I could finish the book. My husband Bill has been a faithful and discerning reader of drafts. My last and greatest debt is to him for his constant love, patience, and intelligence and to Jennifer and Nicholas for their affection, liveliness, and stimulating conversation.
