

Physics

Chris Zafiratos

Physics

Chris Zafiratos

University of Colorado

John Wiley & Sons, Inc.

New York

London

Sydney

Toronto

Cover: The beam of light from a metal-vapor laser dispersed into its constituent colors by a diffraction grating. (Photo by Fritz Goro)

Copyright © 1976, by John Wiley & Sons, Inc.

All rights reserved. Published simultaneously in Canada.

No part of this book may be reproduced by any means, nor transmitted, nor translated into a machine language without the written permission of the publisher.

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data

Zafiratos, Chris.
Physics.

Includes index.

I.	Physics.	I.	Title.
QC21.2.Z3	530		75-14034
ISBN 0-471-98104-4

Printed in the United States of America.

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2

Preface

This book grew out of my experience teaching the standard calculus-based physics course at the University of Colorado. Though many of the students had a previous calculus course, calculus was not a prerequisite but rather a corequisite requirement. It was tempting to blame insufficiencies of some students upon their lack of a previous calculus course, but this did not seem to be the case. Instead, the most frequent difficulty of the beginning students was an inability to describe an everyday setting in the analytical language of physics, and to project that language back into their reality. Alternatively put, translation from the English language into the language of mathematics, and the inverse process, is a skill which most beginning physics students lack.

The transition from "hunting for a formula which gives the answer," to a reasoning approach that draws upon several facets of knowledge is probably the most difficult step in the development of a physics student. If new ideas are presented too rapidly this transition often is not made at all by the average student. Even a simple notational change, e.g. the dot product, is another fact to be absorbed and digested and can be a distraction. Accordingly, I have tried to pace reasonably the introduction of new concepts. I have also tried to explain more of the reasoning behind many concepts because my students appear to profit from this kind of help.

I have encouraged students to draw sketches and to use mathematical reasoning by example and by explicit direction and discussion. Each new block of material is followed by simple exercises which can be solved readily. These exercises help the student retain the basic ideas and calculational steps utilized in discussing a given phenomenon. When the student is then asked to combine several ideas he is better prepared to do so.

Since many of my students are more interested in dynamics rather than statics, I have begun the text with a discussion of motion and Newton's laws of motion. The concept of momentum is used in a fundamental way and both the differential and integral form of Newton's second law are discussed immediately. The early introduction of calculus does not seem to be a special source of difficulty since most calculus courses are still stressing foundations of calculus at the time a parallel physics course with any ordering of topics has need for differentiation and integration. To aid the student enrolled in a corequisite calculus course I have included some math where appropriate. In fact, Chapter Two is a brief introduction to calculus in the setting of kinematics. Mathematical topics are subsequently discussed as they are needed. They are not discussed in a general way, as they would be in a mathematics course, but only in the limited context required in our coverage of physics. This not only serves to prevent overburdening the student with too much knowledge too quickly, but also frequently helps the student who later encounters the same topics in all their appropriate generality in a mathematics course. Most of this supplemental mathematical material is arranged so that it can be deleted by the well-prepared reader.

The first half of the book is taken up with mechanics and thermodynamics. The second half begins with wave motion and leads directly into light as an example of a wave phenomenon. Physical and geometrical optics are discussed. Electricity and magnetism then follow, including a chapter which deals with Maxwell's prediction of electromagnetic waves and the inclusion of light waves in this phenomenon. The final chapter introduces the student to quantum physics. It is historical in its organization and emphasizes wave-particle duality. The overwhelming emphasis of the book is on classical physics, but underlying atomic phenomena are discussed wherever they are appropriate.

In recent years introductory physics courses have concentrated on a physicist's view of physics rather than that of the user of physics. Thus, topics such as musical scales, motors, alternating-current circuits and optical instruments have been dropped or de-emphasized by some texts. I have tried to steer a middle course, including those topics which seemed of interest or value to many of the variety of students encountered in introductory physics.

The International System of Units (SI) is the primary system utilized in this book. However, the wide variety of units encountered in applications of basic physics tends to put off the student who has never made conversions from one set of units to another. Further, it is still true that most readers have a better mental image of the foot, pound, quart and mile than of their SI analogs. Accordingly, some use is made of English units in early sections of the book. Other units are mentioned and occasionally used in examples when their use seems appropriate, but SI units are emphasized throughout.

I am indebted to many people for their help during the preparation of this book. John Taylor deserves very special thanks for his thorough and constructive criticism after teaching from the entirety of the mimeographed notes. Many other colleagues at the University of Colorado have helped with discussion and William Campbell helped by teaching from the first half of the notes at the University of Nebraska. David Cannell of the University of California, Santa Barbara, Dorothy Wollum of California State, Fullerton, and Jack Wollum of California State, Los Angeles all provided valuable suggestions. Helpful comments were also given by Haywood Blum of Drexel University, Lowell Wood of the University of Houston and Thomas Erber of the Illinois Institute of Technology. Several students have made useful comments and suggestions, most notably Molly Rothenberg, Mark Utlaut and Larry Zanetti; and many have offered encouragement. Several fine photographs (those not otherwise credited) resulted from the joint efforts of John Groft and Robert Stoller. George Thomsen's early support and persistent encouragement were most welcome. Finally, for the typing and proofreading of endless chapters and revisions, and for her constant support, I thank my wife Joellen.

Chris D. Zafiratos
February 1975

About the Author

Chris Zafiratos is a Professor of Physics at the University of Colorado. He received his B.S. at Lewis and Clark College in 1957 and his Ph.D. at the University of Washington in 1962. He continued with post-doctoral research in Nuclear Physics at the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory and taught at Oregon State University before coming to the University of Colorado in 1966. He is a member of the American Physical Society and publishes research articles in experimental nuclear physics. He has been involved with the evolution of introductory physics courses at the University of Colorado and currently (1974-76) serves as chairman of the Nuclear Physics Laboratory of the University of Colorado.

Contents

1	Introduction	1	4	Introduction to Dynamics	68
1-1	The Content of Physics	1	4-1	Introduction	68
1-2	The Fundamental Quantities of Mechanics	3	4-2	The Law of Inertia: Newton's First Law	68
1-3	Measurement and Standards	4	4-3	Inertial Mass: Introduction	70
1-4	Systems of Units	6	4-4	Inertial Mass: Definition	70
1-5	Dimensions and Algebraic Operations	8	4-5	Momentum	71
1-6	Rounding off Numbers	10	4-6	Force	76
			4-7	Gravitation, Weight, and Inertial Mass	79
			4-8	Inertial Frames	83
			4-9	Summary	86
2	Introduction to Calculus	13	5	Applying the Laws of Dynamics	91
2-1	Introduction	13	5-1	Introduction	91
2-2	Motion of a Particle	13	5-2	Passengers in Accelerated Systems	91
2-3	Instantaneous Velocity	20	5-3	Newton's Third Law	94
2-4	Graphical Differentiation	23	5-4	Apparent Failures of Newton's Third Law	99
2-5	Algebraic Functions	25	5-5	Tension and Compression	101
2-6	Motion with Constant Velocity	28	5-6	Forces Transmitted by Accelerating Ropes	102
2-7	The Antiderivative or Indefinite Integral	31	5-7	Many-Body Systems	103
2-8	The Definite Integral	33	5-8	Rocket Motion	106
2-9	Summary	39	5-9	Summary	113
3	Kinematics in One Dimension	46	6	Newton's Second Law in Integral Form	117
3-1	Introduction	46	6-1	Introduction	117
3-2	Velocity	46	6-2	The Impulse-Momentum Theorem	118
3-3	Motion with Constant Velocity	48	6-3	Average Force	122
3-4	Acceleration	48	6-4	Applications to Collisions	125
3-5	Motion with Constant Acceleration	51	6-5	Newtonian Drag	126
3-6	Free Fall	56	6-6	Summary	129
3-7	An Important Derived Equation	59
3-8	Motion with Variable Acceleration	60
3-9	Summary	63

7	Kinematics in Three Dimensions	133
7-1	Introduction	133		10-6	The Rolling Wheel
7-2	Scalars and Vectors	133		10-7	The Angular Velocity Vector
7-3	Vector Notation	134		10-8	The Vector Product
7-4	Vector Addition	137		10-9	Summary
7-5	Velocity in Three Dimensions	141
7-6	Acceleration in Three Dimensions	144	11	Rotational Dynamics	211
7-7	Projectile Motion	146	11-1	Introduction	211
7-8	Summary	150	11-2	Differentiation of Vector Products	211
8	Dynamics in Three Dimensions	153	11-3	Torque and Angular Momentum	214
8-1	Introduction	153	11-4	Moment of Inertia for Extended Mass Distributions	219
8-2	Conservation of Momentum	153	11-5	Conservation of Angular Momentum	225
8-3	Force as a Vector	158	11-6	Rotational Motion with Torque Perpendicular to the Angular Momentum	228
8-4	Resolution of Forces	159	11-7	An Alternative Treatment of Gyroscopic Phenomena	231
8-5	Frames of Reference	160	11-8	Center of Gravity	232
8-6	The Principle of Relativity	164	11-9	Rolling on an Inclined Plane	233
8-7	Center of Mass	166	11-10	The Parallel Axis Theorem	235
8-8	The Center of Mass of Continuous Bodies	171	11-11	Summary	237
8-9	Summary	174
9	Motion in a Plane	180	12	Statics	242
9-1	Introduction	180	12-1	Equilibrium	242
9-2	Uniform Circular Motion	180	12-2	Application of the Equilibrium Conditions	243
9-3	Centripetal and Centrifugal Forces	182	12-3	Frictional Forces	247
9-4	Circular Motion with Gravity Present	184	12-4	Summary	249
9-5	Sliding Friction	186
9-6	Static Friction	188	13	Properties of Materials	253
9-7	Motion on an Inclined Plane	191	13-1	Introduction	253
9-8	Summary	193	13-2	Density	253
10	Kinematics of Rotations	197	13-3	Atomic Structure of Matter	255
10-1	Introduction	197	13-4	Stress, Strain, and Elastic Moduli	259
10-2	Rotations and Radian Measure	197	13-5	Strength of Materials	262
10-3	Angular Velocity and Angular Acceleration	199	13-6	Summary	264
10-4	Analogies between Translational and Rotational Kinematics	200	14	Kinetic Energy	268
10-5	Tangential Velocity and Acceleration	202	14-1	Introduction	268
			14-2	The Work-Kinetic Energy Theorem	268

14-3	Variable Forces in One Dimension	270	17	Gravitation	342
14-4	Work Done by a Spring	273	17-1	Introduction	342
14-5	Work in Three Dimensions	274	17-2	The Inverse Square Law of Gravity	344
14-6	Work Done by Gravity	277	17-3	The Cavendish Experiment	347
14-7	Kinetic Energy of Rotation	279	17-4	Gravitational and Inertial Mass	349
14-8	Combined Translation and Rotation	281	17-5	Circular Orbits	350
14-9	Power	283	17-6	Kepler's Second Law	353
14-10	Kinetic Energy in Relativity	286	17-7	Spherical Mass Distributions	355
14-11	Summary	287	17-8	Variation of g	358
Appendix:	Kinetic Energy of a Translating, Rotating, Rigid Body	289	17-9	Gravitational Potential Energy	360
15	Potential Energy and Conservation of Energy	293	17-10	Summary	362
15-1	Introduction	293	18	Behavior of Fluids	365
15-2	Gravitational Potential Energy	294	18-1	Introduction	365
15-3	Elastic Forces	295	18-2	Pressure in Static Liquids	366
15-4	Conservation of Energy and Dissipative Forces	298	18-3	Pressure Measurements and Atmospheric Pressure	371
15-5	The General Relation between Force and Potential Energy	300	18-4	Buoyancy	372
15-6	Interatomic Forces	305	18-5	Pressure in Moving Fluids	376
15-7	Ballistic Pendulum	309	18-6	Applications of the Bernoulli Effect	379
15-8	Collisions	311	18-7	Summary	381
15-9	Summary	314	Appendix:	Pressure Variation in Compressible Fluids	382
16	Simple Harmonic Motion	318	19	Temperature and Heat	386
16-1	Introduction	318	19-1	Introduction	386
16-2	The Equation of Motion	319	19-2	Thermometry	387
16-3	Sinusoidal Functions of Time	320	19-3	Thermal Expansion: A Microscopic View	391
16-4	Characteristics of Simple Harmonic Motion	327	19-4	Thermal Expansion: A Macroscopic View	392
16-5	Energetics of Simple Harmonic Motion	329	19-5	Heat	394
16-6	Relations between Simple Harmonic Motion and Uniform Circular Motion	330	19-6	Calorimetry	395
16-7	Pendulum Motion	333	19-7	Conduction of Heat	398
16-8	Summary	335	19-8	Radiation	401
Appendix:	Expansion of the Sine Function and Small-Angle Approximation	337	19-9	Convection	403
			19-10	Summary	403
			Appendix:	Conduction of Heat through a Cylindrical Shell	404

20	States of Matter	409	23-5	Complex Waveforms	480
20-1	Introduction	409	23-6	Attenuation and Dispersion	485
20-2	Phase Changes	410	23-7	Surface Waves on Water	486
20-3	Behavior of Gases	412	23-8	Summary	488
20-4	Kinetic Theory of Gases	415	24	Light as a Wave Phenomenon	491
20-5	Work Done in Isothermal Expansion	418	24-1	Introduction	491
20-6	Work Done in Adiabatic Expansion	419	24-2	Shadows	492
20-7	Summary	420	24-3	The Speed of Light	494
Appendix:	Van der Waals' Equation	421	24-4	Interference and Young's Experiment	496
21	Thermodynamic Laws and Heat Engines	425	24-5	Huygens' Principle	499
21-1	Introduction	425	24-6	Diffraction	501
21-2	The First Law of Thermodynamics	426	24-7	Single-Slit Diffraction	502
21-3	Specific Heats of an Ideal Gas	428	24-8	The Diffraction Grating	504
21-4	Efficiency of Heat Engines	431	24-9	Characteristics of Light Sources	507
21-5	The Carnot Cycle	432	24-10	The Michelson Interferometer	509
21-6	Refrigerators	435	24-11	Summary	511
21-7	The Second Law of Thermodynamics	437	25	Reflection and Images	515
21-8	Entropy	438	25-1	Introduction	515
21-9	Thermal Consequences of Power Production	439	25-2	The Law of Reflection	516
21-10	Summary	441	25-3	Images	517
22	Wave Motion	445	25-4	The Focal Point of a Curved Mirror	520
22-1	Introduction	445	25-5	Images Produced by a Concave Mirror	521
22-2	Description of Waves	445	25-6	Convex Mirrors	526
22-3	Sinusoidal Waves	447	25-7	Magnification	528
22-4	Sound	450	25-8	Summary	531
22-5	The Doppler Effect	452	26	Refraction and Lenses	534
22-6	Interference	457	26-1	Introduction	534
22-7	Standing Waves	460	26-2	The Law of Refraction	534
22-8	Summary	464	26-3	Total Internal Reflection	537
23	Wave Dynamics	469	26-4	Refraction by Slabs and Prisms	538
23-1	Introduction	469	26-5	Image Formation by a Plane Refracting Surface	541
23-2	Wave Velocity on a Stretched String	469	26-6	Converging Lenses	542
23-3	Velocity of Sound Waves	473	26-7	Diverging Lenses	546
23-4	Reflections	478	26-8	Graphical Methods	546
			26-9	Aberrations	549
			26-10	Summary	550

27	Optical Instruments	555	30-4	Gauss's Law	624
27-1	Introduction	555	30-5	Applying Gauss's Law	628
27-2	The Camera	555	30-6	Location of Excess Charge on a Conductor	633
27-3	The Eye	557	30-7	The Electric Field near a Charged Conductor	635
27-4	Combinations of Lenses	560	30-8	Circulation of Flux	637
27-5	Correction of Visual Defects	564	30-9	Circulation of Electric Fields	639
27-6	The Simple Magnifier	565	30-10	Summary	640
27-7	The Microscope	566	31	Electric Potential	645
27-8	The Telescope	568	31-1	Introduction	645
27-9	Resolving Power	570	31-2	Electric Potential Energy	645
27-10	Antireflection Coatings	572	31-3	Electric Potential	647
27-11	Summary	573	31-4	Behavior of Potential Difference for Simple Cases	650
28	Electricity	577	31-5	Electrical Discharges in Gases	658
28-1	Introduction	577	31-6	The Van de Graaff Generator	659
28-2	The Electric Force	578	31-7	Summary	662
28-3	Coulomb's Law	578	Appendix:	Electric Potential in Three Dimensions; Partial Differentiation	662
28-4	Continuously Distributed Charges	582	32	Capacitance	666
28-5	The Electrical Nature of Matter	584	32-1	Introduction	666
28-6	Friction and Frictional Electricity	586	32-2	Capacitance	666
28-7	Conductors and Insulators	589	32-3	The Parallel-Plate Capacitor	668
28-8	Charging by Induction	591	32-4	Edge Effects	670
28-9	Atmospheric Electricity	592	32-5	Dielectrics	671
28-10	Rutherford Scattering	594	32-6	Series and Parallel Connections	675
28-11	Summary	598	32-7	Energy Storage in Capacitors	677
29	Electric Fields	602	32-8	Summary	679
29-1	Introduction	602	33	Charges in Motion	683
29-2	The Electric Field Strength, E	603	33-1	Introduction	683
29-3	The Superposition Principle	606	33-2	Current	683
29-4	Spherical Charge Distributions	609	33-3	Resistance	685
29-5	Pictorial Representations of Electric Fields	610	33-4	Emf and the Simple Circuit	689
29-6	The Electric Force on a Moving Charge	613	33-5	Ammeters and Voltmeters	693
29-7	Summary	616	33-6	Series and Parallel Circuits	695
30	Integral Properties of the Electric Field	619	33-7	Power in Electric Circuits	697
30-1	Introduction	619	33-8	Resistivity	699
30-2	Flux and Flux Density	619	33-9	A Microscopic View of Resistivity	701
30-3	Electric Flux	620	33-10	Summary	704

34	Magnetic Fields	708	37	Circuits Containing Capacitors and Inductors	784
34-1	Introduction	708	37-1	Introduction	784
34-2	The Magnetic Field: A Historical View	709	37-2	Voltage-Current Relations for Capacitors and Inductors	784
34-3	The Magnetic Force: Two Charges with a Common Velocity	710	37-3	The RC Circuit	786
34-4	The Magnetic Field	713	37-4	RC Differentiators and Integrators	791
34-5	Circular Orbits in a Magnetic Field	715	37-5	LR Circuits	794
34-6	The Hall Effect	719	37-6	The LC Circuit	797
34-7	Magnetic Forces on Current-Carrying Conductors	721	37-7	The Series LRC Circuit	801
34-8	The Galvanometer	724	37-8	Summary	804
34-9	Summary	726	38	Alternating Currents	809
35	Sources of Magnetic Fields	731	38-1	Introduction	809
35-1	Introduction	731	38-2	Reactance	810
35-2	Oersted and Faraday	731	38-3	Rotor Diagrams	813
35-3	The Magnetic Field Caused by a Current	733	38-4	The LRC Series Circuit	815
35-4	Integral Properties of the Magnetic Field: Ampere's Law	738	38-5	Resonance	818
35-5	The Force between Parallel Currents	742	38-6	Power in AC Circuits	822
35-6	Magnetic Materials	744	38-7	Transformers	825
35-7	Motors	748	38-8	Summary	828
35-8	Summary	748	39	Electromagnetic Radiation	831
36	Electromagnetic Induction	753	39-1	Introduction	831
36-1	Introduction	753	39-2	Electric Induction	832
36-2	Faraday's Observations	754	39-3	Maxwell and Hertz	835
36-3	Motional Emf	755	39-4	The Speed of Electromagnetic Waves	836
36-4	Conservation of Energy for Motional Emf's	763	39-5	Radiation from Antennas	840
36-5	Induced Electric Fields	765	39-6	Radiation from Accelerated Charges	842
36-6	Inductance	769	39-7	Polarization	844
36-7	Magnetic Forces Produced by Induced Currents	772	39-8	Energy and Momentum of Radiation	845
36-8	Lenz's Law	774	39-9	The Michelson-Morley Experiment	848
36-9	Relativity in Induction Phenomena	775	39-10	Summary	852
36-10	Energy Stored in an Inductor	776	40	Quantum Physics	856
36-11	Summary	777	40-1	Introduction	856
			40-2	Planck and Cavity Radiation	857
			40-3	Einstein and the Photoelectric Effect	859

40-4	The Bohr Model of the Hydrogen Atom	862	Appendix	877
40-5	Louis de Broglie's Matter Waves	867
40-6	The Meaning of the Wave Function	870	Answers to Exercises and Odd-Numbered Problems	885
40-7	Classical and Quantum Physics	874
40-8	Summary	874	Index	905

Chapter 1

Introduction

1-1 The Content of Physics Many of the physical sciences imply their content in their name: astronomy, biology, and oceanography are examples. Physics, however, does not. Indeed, the subject matter of physics is so broad that it underlies and runs through all of the physical sciences. Because of the tremendous revolutions in relativity and quantum physics that occurred around 1900, it is convenient to divide physics into classical physics (pre-1900) and modern physics. Some topics included in these two areas of physics are tabulated below.

TABLE 1-1. Some Topics of Classical and Modern Physics

Classical Physics	Modern Physics
Mechanics	Quantum mechanics
Gravitation.	Relativity
Heat	Atoms
Sound	Nuclei
Light	Elementary particles
Electricity	Condensed matter
Magnetism

Mechanics is the name given to the theory of motion. It gives a precise relationship between motion and the forces that cause it. By the beginning of this century it was already clear that heat and sound phenomena could be understood in the framework of classical mechanics, the mechanics originated by Newton in the seventeenth century. It was also clear that electricity and magnetism formed a unified topic and, further, that light was simply an electromagnetic wave. The physicist of the 1890s had every reason to be smug. The way in which electric charges moved could be understood by combining electricity and magnetism with mechanics, and the way in which planets and stars moved could be understood by combining gravitation and mechanics. Since matter is composed of atoms, which themselves contain electric charges and gravitating mass, complete understanding of the physical universe seemed at hand.

Unfortunately, classical mechanics failed badly when it was applied to the internal motion of atoms. As an example of the magnitude of the failure, consider the lifetime of isolated atoms. Classical physics predicts that such atoms will collapse in 10^{-8} seconds, yet atoms are known to be perfectly stable for periods of time enormously longer than that.

Over a period of years, culminating in the 1930s, the new theory of quantum mechanics was developed. It dealt, correctly, with questions of atomic and subatomic motion and structure. It also showed that the older classical physics was correct for objects much larger than atoms, as long as the velocities involved were much smaller than that of light.

For motion involving velocities near that of light (3×10^8 meters/second), classical mechanics fails even for objects much larger than atomic dimensions. Einstein's special theory of relativity leads to a relativistic mechanics that is part of modern physics and that can cope with all possible velocities. Einstein's general theory of relativity replaces Newton's classical theory of gravitation. General relativity is required, for example, to understand the gravitational effects of ultradense stars, which are currently of great interest in astronomy. However, for the sort of densities and velocities encountered in our solar system, classical gravitational theory is for the most part sufficient.

Most of the phenomena of an everyday nature and a good many of those encountered in modern technology can be understood most simply and elegantly with the aid of classical physics. Furthermore, the groundwork covered in a study of classical physics is required in any thorough study of modern physics. Some ideas of modern physics will be touched upon in this text but we will concentrate heavily upon classical physics.

Having briefly described the major topics of physics and the portion covered in this text, we ask, what about the work carried on by the contemporary physicist? A good many physicists, along with their colleagues in engineering, are occupied with applications of physical knowledge for benefit of consumers, corporations, governments, etc. These physicists collectively utilize the full range of classical and modern knowledge. Obviously a good many physicists teach physics. Finally, many contemporary physicists pursue basic research aimed at the unanswered questions of physics. Of course, many individual physicists fall into more than one category. We can obtain some idea of the unanswered questions that attract the attention of research physicists by listing the major categories of the papers that are published in current research journals.

TABLE 1-2 Major Categories in Current Physics Journals

Atoms, molecules and related topics
Condensed matter (solids and fluids)
Electromagnetic, gravitational, and quantum fields
Elementary particles
Nuclear reactions and nuclear structure
Quantum mechanics
Statistical mechanics and thermodynamics

What may be the most important modern development in science is perhaps too close in time to be clearly recognized. This development is the wide-ranging unification of all the physical sciences, including engineering and biology. This unification is an ongoing process that has enormous benefits in increasing our intellectual power with an economy of required basic concepts. The contemporary physicist finds more and more of the language and methods his predecessors developed appearing in all the physical sciences. The increasing unity in the panorama of the sciences may be a reflection of a basically simple and unified universe. Or we may be in for a rude awakening in the near future. In any event, these are lively times for the intellectually curious person.

1-2 The Fundamental Quantities of Mechanics

Many quantities enter into mechanics: speed, force, mass, acceleration, length, time, direction, and weight are examples that come to mind. Most of the above quantities can be defined in terms of one another. Speed, for example, is simply the ratio of the distance covered (a length) to the time required to do so. However, a certain