Alan Golabek, 24 stone, takes Allan Easter, 22 stone, for a ride in Melbourne.

roll with the laughs

Golabek, 24, a 24-stone accountant, drinks beer and exercises. But diet? No.

Rommeril, 22, who is 22 television technician PMG, is trying to eat. "I've already lost 10kg," he said. "Diet."

Alan Easter, 22, likes being fat, so at he hopes to stay that way.

thinking that way nowadays. Besides, for an actor fat is personally. Not that it was intentional. I was -14 stone at school. I had to learn to roll with it.

A GATHERING

"You know," said the fat, "everyone laughs with as well as at a fat man — look at them now."

People gathered in the street to watch them in their lacy shorts, black tights and thinking that way. Everyone was laughing.

"Would they be laughing like that if we were all thin?" said Party. "They wouldn't even see us."

The cycling demonstration was an answer to complaints that Taiwan-made bikes weren't safe and follows new legislation in Taiwan that has reduced cycle manufacturers there from 70 to 22. They are now required to observe new quality controls.

It was quite a treat, down of Bourke Street. To see the big men pedal. They didn't look sweet, up on the seat. But they should have been given a medal.

Two of Melbourne's heaviest men wobbled across the Bourke Street tram line yesterday in a traffic policeman's nightmare.

They are Alan Golabek, 24 stone (left) and Allan Easter, 22 stone. The Southern Cross Hotel in which they came to an exhaustive rest.

All got off and pushed at some stage up the hills — and the three-wheeler needed a fair bit of spanner work to keep it road-worthy.

At the end of it all the riders were given a hand — and the bikes were handed to the youth welfare division of the State Welfare Department.

TO: Dr. Li Fei Chen
Bureau of Chinese

Dear Mr. Chen,

Thank you for your letter of date to the Bureau of Chinese. The amount and title not to back before a court of justice, so there is no need to acknowledge receipt of your request; however, I take the opportunity to assure you that we feel free to grant it.

First of all, a couple of words on my ask for the exclusive copyright to the "Sobel Lecture Award-winning works". When you were in Stockholm, a representative of the Nobel Foundation told me that the Chinese government had given permission to publish the Nobel lectures in Chinese without compensation. Since no written letter of the Chinese government has been sent to me, I am afraid that the Chinese government may not have given such permission. Therefore, I would kindly request that you do not let there be no guarantee that these books would not reach the districts you wish to cover with your series.

However, the Nobel Foundation does not generally favour the idea of initial exclusive rights for the publication of the Nobel lectures. Further experiences have not been encouraging and it is rather a complicated thing to handle. It would involve our lawyer, signing of contracts, royalty reports etc.

But, as I said before, those are my personal thoughts and I shall of course give your request to Mr. Ramel to decide on and answer when he comes back.

Sincerely yours,

Gudrun Saxe
Secretary
