Introduction

I . China Marine Statistical Yearbook (2002) is a data almanac which reflects in an all-round way the development of marine economy, marine management and service in the People's Republic of China between 1999 and 2001, and it is a Chinese-English bilingual edition.

II . The Yearbook's statistics cover the production and activities in the marine and coastal areas in relation to the development, management and utilization of marine resources and space, and the development of marine social economy. The regions covered are cities and counties (county-level cities) with coastlines. The provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities directly under the Central Government, and the counties are arranged in order according to the Administrative Zoning Codes of the People's Republic of China.

III. The data in the Yearbook have incorporated from 2001 , on the basis of the original contents including integrated data, marine fisheries, offshore oil and natural gas, beach placer, sea salt industry, coastal shipbuilding, marine communications and transportation, coastal tourism, marine science and education, marine environmental protection, marine service, world marine economy, etc., new additions concerning marine chemical, marine biological pharmaceutical and health products, marine electric power and seawater utilization, marine engineering architecture, and marine information consultation and service industries as well as other marine industries. In addition, the original coastal international tourism is changed into coastal tourism, which consists of two components: international tourism and domestic tourism.

IV. The main data sources of the Yearbook are the annual statistical reports, yearbooks and data compilations provided by the marine statistical information net consisting of 20 ministries, commissions, bureaus and general corporations as well as the regional statistical data provided by the statistical bureaus and the oceanic administrations of the coastal provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the Central Government.

V . The development status of marine social economy may be manifested in the major social-economic indexes of various major marine industries (such as marine fisheries, offshore oil and natural gas, beach placer, marine salt-making industry, marine chemical industry, marine medicines, marine electric power, coastal shipbuilding, marine architecture, marine communications and transportation, coastal tourism, marine service, other marine industries etc.) and marine social economy of the coastal cities and counties (county-level cities).

VI. Unless otherwise specified in the Yearbook, all the value indicators are given at the current price. At the end of the Yearbook are attached explanatory notes to the major marine statistical indicators, giving a brief explanation for the meaning, statistical range and statistical methods of the major marine statistical indicators. Other notes to the statistical data are listed below the tables. For the data with continued tables, annotations, if any, are put below the last table.

VII. The usage of symbols in the tables: “...” indicates the statistics smaller than the minimum calculation unit in the table; “Blank” indicates that the data of the statistical index is unknown for the time being or that there shouldn't be any data; “#” indicates the major items of the table; Other symbols, such as “*” or “①”, indicate “see footnotes below” .

VIII. For reasons of digital accuracy, there is small difference between the sum of values of some subterms after having been rounded off and the total values.

IX. The domestic part of the Yearbook does not include that of Hong Kong Special Administrative Region , Macao Special Administrative Region and Taiwan Province .

X. In the course of editing China Marine Statistical Yearbook, we enjoyed energetic support from the various departments concerned and we hereby extend our heartfelt thanks to them.
