Chapter One

A Brief Introduction to BEC Vantage Reading

BEC Vantage reading test consists of five parts. The time allowed is one hour. The main skill focus on part one is reading - scanning and gist. The input is one longer or four shorter information texts, approximately 250 - 350 words in total. The response required is matching. There are seven questions. The main skill focus on part two is reading - understanding text structure. The input is single texts: articles, reports, etc. with sentence level gaps (texts plus 7 option sentences approximately 450 - 550 words in total). The response required is matching. There are five questions. The main skill focus on part three is reading for gist and specific information. The input is a single text, approximately 450 - 550 words. The response required is 4 - option multiple choice. There are 6 questions. The main skill focus on part four is reading - vocabulary and structure. The input is a single text with lexical gaps (text including gapped words approximately 200 - 300 words). The response required is 4 - option multiple choice cloze. There are 15 questions. The main skill focus on the last part, namely, part five is reading-understanding sentence structure/error identification. The input is a short text (150 - 200 words), identification of additional unnecessary words in the text. The response required is proof reading. There are twelve questions. Now let us have a detailed look at the tasks.

The stem of a multiple choice item may take the form of a que:

This is a matching task. There are four short texts on a related theme (e.g. descriptions of a group of products, or advertisements for jobs) or a single text divided into four sections. Although the context of each text will be similar, there will also be information that is particular to each text. The texts are labeled A-D. Candidates are presented with a set of seven items which are statements related to the texts. They are expected to match each statement with the relevant text.

This task consists of a text accompanied by four-option multiple choice Item

Questions in part one tend to focus mostly on the identification of specific information and detail. However, an item could focus on gist by testing areas such as the target reader or the topic.

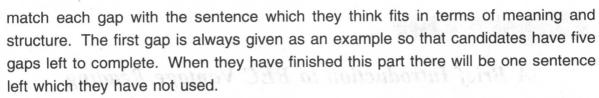

Part Two

This is a matching task, comprising a text that has had six sentences removed from it and a set of seven sentences labeled A - G. Candidates are required to

The texts for this part will have been chosen because they have a clear line of thought or argument that can still be discerned by the reader with the sentences removed. In doing the task, therefore, students should be trained to read through the gapped text and the list of sentences first, in order to get an idea of what it is about. Having done that, they should be reassured that there is only one sentence that fits each gap.

This part tests understanding of text structure as well as meaning and gaps will be reasonably far apart so that candidates can successfully anticipate the appropriate lexical and grammatical features of the missing sentence. Candidates can be expected to be tested on a variety of cohesive features with both a backward and forward reference, sometimes going beyond the sentence level. Thus, while selecting the appropriate sentence for a gap, they should read before and after the text to ensure that it fits well. At the end of this part, they should read through the entire text, inserting the gapped sentences as they go along, to ensure that the information is coherent.

Part Three uper earnoger and the text the response requirements and the response representations are requirements.

This task consists of a text accompanied by four-option multiple choice items. The stem of a multiple choice item may take the form of a question or an incomplete sentence. There are six items, which are placed after the text. The text is 450 to 550 words long. Sources of original texts may be the general and business press, company literature and books on topics such as management. Texts may be edited, but the source is authentic.

Part Four and double method by the set of sever items which are sensely before

This is a multiple choice cloze test with fifteen gaps, most of which test lexical items, and may focus on correct word choice, lexical collocations and fixed phrases. The texts chosen for this part will come from varied sources but they will all have a straightforward message or meaning, so that candidates are being tested on vocabulary and not on their comprehension of the passage.

Part Five

This is an error-correction or proof-reading task based on a text of 150 to 200 words, with twelve items. Candidates identify additional or unnecessary words in a text.

This task can be related to the authentic task of checking a text for errors, and suitable text types are therefore letters, publicity materials, etc. The text is presented as twelve numbered lines, which are the lines containing the items. Further lines at the end may complete the text, but they are not numbered.

Part 1 Business Travel

Passage 1

How to Beat Europe's Sky - High Air Fares

There is good news for business fliers who are fed up with having to pay outrageous prices for tickets. Independent airlines are challenging the monopolies of the state dominated carriers on some key routes in Europe, offering low fares and fewer booking restrictions. And the European Commission's liberalisation package that became effective January 1 paves the way for cheaper economy as well as discount fares. Nevertheless, complications still plague the structure of European air fares. Calculated in cost per mile, the 50 minute trip from London to Paris is five times more expensive that the eight-hour trip from London to New York. London-Athens costs $20 more than London-New York, a trip of more than twice the distance. Both these are for 'unrestricted' tickets. Of course you can fly on a discount ticket which can be as low as 30% of normal economy. But these are so hedged about with restrictions, such as a compulsory Saturday night stay, advance booking or limits on flights, as to frustrate their use for business travel, where you need to be able to cancel or change a flight at the last minute.

Business travelers, who represent about 40% of total air traffic and perhaps 70% of revenue, are the geese who lay the golden eggs. I don't know of any other industry that forces customers using its products or services most to pay the highest premiums. The term 'high – yield' passenger says it all. The solution airlines have found is to segregate the 'high – yield' fliers from discount travelers by placing a movable curtain in an economy cabin with similar seats and configuration and calling it 'business class'. But there are still no price breaks for the business flier.

Enter the independent airlines. One of the first to offer a cheap flexible fare was British Midland, who provided a one-class business service on the highly competitive London-Amsterdam route. The full economy round-trip is $ 273 (same as British Airways or KLM whose business class is $ 324). Then there is a three – day return for $214 (you pay the full fare if you stay longer) as well as the usual cheap discount fares.

If you plan to travel between Dublin and Brussels (via London), you can combine economy and flexibility by flying Ryanair, an independent Irish airline that offers one-class service with unrestricted fares at less than half the price of Aer Lingus, BA and Sabena. Since Ryanair came on the scene two years ago, traffic between Dublin and London has increased by 54%.

Virgin Atlantic, which in my opinion provides the best business class value on the North Atlantic (London Gatwick to New York), offers a one-way unrestricted fare of $63 (plus an $18 weekend surcharge) between Gatwick and Maastricht, a small town in southeast Holland—a business route all its own, with convenient road and rail access to Cologne, Dusseldorf and Eindhoven.

Business Travel Abroad

Business travel abroad can locate and cultivate new customers and improve relationships and communication with current foreign representatives and associates. As in domestic business, there is nothing like a face-to-face meeting with a client or customer.

The following suggestions can help companies prepare for a trip. By keeping in mind that even little things (such as forgetting to check foreign holiday schedules or neglecting to arrange for translator services) can cost time, opportunity, and money, a firm can get maximum value from its time spent abroad.

Planning the itinerary a misted of setaluance to vessed in a viduo or apiero arti

A well – planned itinerary enables a traveler to make the best possible use of time abroad. Although travel time is expensive, care must be taken not to overload the schedule. Two or three definite appointments, confirmed well in advance and spaced comfortably throughout one day, are more productive and enjoyable than a crowded agenda that forces the business person to rush from one meeting to the next before business is really concluded. If possible, an extra rest day to deal with jet lag should be planned before scheduled business appointments. The following travel tips should be kept in mind:

The travel plans should reflect what the company hopes to accomplish. The traveler should give some thought to the trip's goals and their relative priorities.

The traveler should accomplish as much as possible before the trip begins by obtaining names of possible contacts, arranging appointments, checking transportation schedules, and so on. The most important meetings should be confirmed before the traveler leaves the country.

As a general rule, the business person should keep the schedule flexible enough to allow for both unexpected problems (such as transportation delays) and unexpected opportunities. For instance, accepting an unscheduled lunch on invitation from a prospective client should not make it necessary to miss the next scheduled meeting.

The traveler should check the normal work days and business hours in the countries to be visited. In many Middle Eastern regions, for instance, the work week typically runs from Saturday to Thursday. In many countries, lunch hours of two to four hours are customary.

Along the same lines, take foreign holidays into account.

The business person should be aware that travel from one country to another may be restricted. For example, a passport containing an Israeli visa may disallow the traveler from entering certain countries in the Middle East.

Other preparations

Travel agents can frequently arrange for transportation and hotel reservations quickly and efficiently. They can also help plan the itinerary, obtain the best travel rates, explain which countries require visas, advise on hotel rates and locations, and provide other valuable services. Since travel agents' fees are paid by the hotels, airlines, and other carriers, this assistance and expertise may cost nothing.

The traveler should obtain the necessary travel documents two to three months before departure, especially if visas are needed. A travel agent can help make the arrangements. A valid passport is required for all travel outside the country. If traveling on an old passport, you should make sure that it remains valid for the entire duration of the trip.

Visas, which are required by many countries, are provided for a small fee by the foreign country's embassy or consulate. To obtain a visa, the traveler must have a current passport. In addition, many countries require a recent photo. The traveler should allow several weeks to obtain visas, especially if traveling to developing nations. Some countries that do not require visas for tourist travel do require them for business travel. Visa requirements may change from time to time.

Requirements for vaccinations differ from country to country. A travel agent or airline can advise the traveler on various requirements. In some cases, vaccinations against typhus, typhoid, and other diseases are advisable even though they are not required.

Notes:

- 1. vaccination n. 接种疫苗, 种痘, 牛痘疤
- 2. typhus n. 斑疹伤寒症
- 3. typhoid n. 伤寒症

Part 2 Business

Passage 1

Business Organization

Businesses play a vital role in our lives. We depend on them not only for livelihood, but also for the goods and services we use in our daily lives. Nearly everything we own and use—from our food and clothing to our automobiles and homes—is produced by businesses.

A business firm is an organization that brings the factors of production—natural resources, capital goods, the labor together, for the purpose of producing and distributing goods and services.

One of the major characteristics of business firms is specialization and divison of labor. Specialization and division of labor result in increased efficiency in the production process. Economists refer to the savings resulting from this increased efficiency as economies of scale.

Another important characteristic of the business firm centers around risk. There is always the possibility that a business will fail and the money invested in it will be lost.

There are three basic forms of business organization that we will consider: (1) the individual proprietorship; (2) the partnership; and (3) the corporation.

An individual proprietorship is a form of business organization in which the business firm is owned by a single individual (the individual proprietor)who makes all the business decisions, receives all the profits earned by the firm, and is responsible for any losses incurred by the firm.

A partnership is a form of business organization that is collectively owned by two or more people (called partners) who jointly make the business decisions, share the profits of the business, and bear the financial responsibilities for any losses.

A corporation is a form of business organization that is collectively owned by a number of individuals but has the legal status form of business organization.

In addition to above-mentioned forms, there are two other forms of business organization that provide goods and services: nonprofit organizations and cooperatives.

Passage 2

Innovating Your Way to Business Growth

In a difficult economy, when small businesses have trouble finding capital, health insurance and nearly everything else, there in one element of business success that can still be had on the cheap: innovation. According to most economists, innovation remains probably the most important component of small business success. Despite the downturn, smart companies are pouring more into research and development, and small businesses that continue to innovate, even in highly competitive fields, don't only survive, but thrive.

Here, then, is some advice of innovation every entrepreneur should consider.
