PHONETICS

Pronunciation — The Consonants of English

Friction consonants (摩擦音)

There are ten friction consonants in English. For all of them the lungs push air through a narrow opening where it causes friction of various kinds. /f, θ, s, ʃ, h/ are voiceless consonants while /v, ð, z, ʒ, r/ are voiced consonants. The positions of the speech organs for these sounds are shown in the following figures.

/f/ and /v/ Press the lower lip against the upper teeth allowing the air to force its way between them.
