

Bloomberg — BY — Bloomberg

WITH INVALUABLE HELP FROM MATTHEW WINKLER

JOHN WILEY & SONS, INC.

New York • Chichester • Weinheim • Brisbane • Singapore • Toronto

This text is printed on acid-free paper.

Copyright © 1997 by Michael Bloomberg.

Published by John Wiley & Sons, Inc.

All rights reserved. Published simultaneously in Canada.

Reproduction or translation of any part of this work beyond that permitted by Section 107 or 108 of the 1976 United States Copyright Act without the permission of the copyright owner is unlawful. Requests for permission or further information should be addressed to the Permissions Department, John Wiley & Sons, Inc.

This publication is designed to provide accurate and authoritative information in regard to the subject matter covered. It is sold with the understanding that the publisher is not engaged in rendering legal, accounting, or other professional services. If legal advice or other expert assistance is required, the services of a competent professional person should be sought.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data:

Bloomberg, Michael.

Bloomberg by Bloomberg.

p. cm.

Includes index.

ISBN 0-471-15545-4 (cloth : alk. paper)

1. Bloomberg, Michael. 2. Capitalists and financiers—United States—Biography. 3. Investments—United States. 4. Businessmen—United States—Biography. 5. Telecommunication—United States.

I. Title.

HG172.B56A3 1997

384'.06'573092—dc21

[B]

96-53327

Printed in the United States of America

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

To
Emma and Georgina
M.B.

To
Jacob, Nathan, and Lydia
M.W.

Our attempt to answer the question, “What does Daddy do?”

Contents

Chapter 1	The Last Supper	1
	The Thrill of Getting Fired: Tarrytown 1981
Chapter 2	Capitalism, Here I Come	9
	School, Work, and Hard Knocks
Chapter 3	I Love Mondays	39
	Entrepreneurship: Vocation and Avocation
Chapter 4	We Can Do That	67
	Elementary Journalism, Not Rocket Science
Chapter 5	“No” Is No Answer	91
	Establishment Ignorance and Arrogance
Chapter 6	Money Talks	111
	Textbook Multimedia
Chapter 7	Computers for Virgins	131
	Technology: Politics and Promises
Chapter 8	Management 101	159
	The Bloomberg Way
Chapter 9	Coming Up Next	185
	America’s a Wonderful Country
Chapter 10	Out of the Office	203
	Character and Consistency
Chapter 11	Wealth, Wisdom, and Work	227
	Philanthropy and Public Service
Afterword		251
Index		253

The Last Supper

The Thrill of Getting Fired:
Tarrytown 1981

So there I was, thirty-nine years old and essentially hearing, "Here's $10 million; you're history." One summer morning, John Gutfreund, managing partner of Wall Street's hottest firm, and Henry Kaufman, then the world's most influential economist, told me my life at Salomon Brothers was finished.

"Time for you to leave," said John.

On Saturday, August 1, 1981, I was terminated from the only full-time job I'd ever known and from the high-pressure life I loved. This, after fifteen years of twelve-hour days and six-day weeks.

Out!

For a decade and a half, I'd been an integral part of the country's most successful securities trading firm, even of Wall Street itself. Not just in my head. If my press was to be believed, in everyone's. Suddenly, though, needed no longer. I was a general partner. An owner rather than an employee. Nevertheless:

Fired!

I wasn't going to know what was happening, wasn't going to be making decisions, wasn't going to share in "my" company's profits and losses, wasn't going to be part of it at all. "We" had become "them and me."

Bloomberg by Bloomberg

"What do you think about us selling the company?" asked Henry.

"If I'm being thrown out, better now than later," I replied.

Of course, there was the $10 million I was getting. America's a wonderful country.

* * *

The Salomon Brothers Executive Committee had decided to merge the seventy-one-year-old partnership with a publicly held commodities trading firm, Phibro Corporation (previously part of Engelhard Minerals and Chemicals). We found this out on a hot, summer Friday night at a hastily called, "mandatory attendance, utmost-secrecy required," mysterious partners' meeting at the Tarrytown Conference Center, the former New York estate of society hostess Mary Duke Biddle. Security guards surrounded the complex, checking in each participant as he arrived. (Unfortunately, security missed seeing a Fortune magazine photographer who'd been tipped off and was hiding in a tree. So much for confidentiality!) For sixty-three of us, it was our last meeting as Salomon partners and the occasion when Gutfreund and Kaufman told me my time at Salomon Brothers was over.

We got together in a big conference room before dinner. Expensive lawyers and accountants, being paid at overtime rates, hovered to the side. Exchanging furtive glances, they oozed a nervousness, perhaps in fear that some prewritten script would go awry. Tables and chairs were arranged in rows with the Executive Committee seated in front, facing "the troops." At each partner's seat was a dark gray personalized leather folder. I sat at my assigned place and, though we had been told to wait, like everyone else I immediately opened the book in front of me. The first enclosures were financial projections for our company after a proposed merger with Phibro, this almost unknown oil, metals, and agricultural commodities dealer. Pro forma income statements, balance sheets, legal documents, and other corporate gibberish were attached.

The Last Supper

But the second presentation in the book was infinitely more interesting: the effect of the deal on me as an individual. It meant millions of dollars in my pocket!

The pointless speeches went on and on. The Executive Committee was determined to sell the assets of the Salomon partnership. This transaction was a foregone conclusion: The process, a jury trial parody, where witnesses saw the accused pull the trigger, no mitigating circumstances are entered as evidence, and the judge instructs the jurors to deliberate. Everybody walks into the jury room and the foreman asks, "Did he do it?"

Twelve people instantaneously answer, "Guilty."

"Let's go back."

"We can't. We've got to give the accused some consideration. Let's sit around and talk for an hour."

So at Tarrytown we talked for sixty minutes. We were solemn. We were serious. Some asked about differences in corporate culture, others about earnings potential, a few about management structure and duplication of staff functions.

Irrelevant! The Executive Committee wanted this merger and could have voted it through on its own. Yes, we were presented with a fait accompli. But, make no mistake. There was 100 percent approval from the rest of the general partners. Nobody in that meeting gave a moment's thought to rejecting the sale, including me. It was such a lucrative deal for us, as owners.

By the time we sat down to eat, everything was said and done. We were all as serious and businesslike as we possibly could be while trying to stifle the enormous grins on our faces. Everybody attending this meeting was now wealthy beyond his dreams. Previously, partners' money had just been numbers in a capital account ledger book, "funny money." We could give it to charity, or retire, and wait another ten years to get at it. Other than that (and 5 percent interest paid out to us yearly), our fortune was only on paper. That was then. But this was now. All of a sudden, it was real. And ours. In our pockets. In cash!

Bloomberg by Bloomberg

We were told not to tell anyone until the public announcement the coming Monday. Nobody, inside the company or outside, had known that a sale was even being considered. (Still, my friend and partner Bob Salomon guessed, the day before, that whatever was brewing involved Phibro Corp. He showed me the company's symbol on his stock monitor before we drove to the Tarrytown meeting. Smarter than the rest of us!) The Executive Committee hadn't told the retired limited partners. Not even Billy Salomon, the grand, old man of the company. He was informed personally in a much criticized surprise helicopter visit to his Southampton summer home two days later.

Strict instructions to the contrary notwithstanding, some partners did telephone their wives that Friday night. I thought it was nonsensical to make your spouse a possible leak suspect. What difference would it make if she didn't know for an extra day? Others didn't share my view. One partner called his wife while she was at their country club. She ran back into the club's dining room screaming, "We're rich, we're rich!" Fortunately, nobody paid any attention to her.

After the meeting, we ate greasy steaks and drank hard liquor. We shot pool, smoked Cuban cigars, played poker, and laughed uproariously. It was a great big wonderful fraternity party. Boozing and carousing into the wee hours. No thoughts of others. A moment just for us. We had worked for it; and whether or not we deserved it, we got it!

* * *

The next day, Saturday, with enormous hangovers evident all around, each partner sat down with two members of the Executive Committee. My meeting was with Gutfreund and Kaufman. Most of the sixty-three partners were asked to stay on as employees of the new company. Not me, though. A half a dozen other guys were pushed out at that time as well.

"Since you don't need me anymore, I'm going home."

The Last Supper

There was no reason to stay for the meetings with the new owners. I wasn't going to be involved.

Was I sad on the drive home? You bet. But, as usual, I was much too macho to show it. And I did have $10 million in cash and convertible bonds as compensation for my hurt feelings. If I had to go, this was the time. I was getting my money out of the firm then instead of ten years later. With Phibro paying a merger premium, I was doubling my net worth. Since somebody else had made the decision, I'd even avoided agonizing over whether to stay at Salomon—a timely question, given my then-declining prospects in the company.

Still, it was unsettling that future discussions would be about someone else's company, a firm that until then had been mine. If they'd said, "We have another job for you"—say, running the Afghanistan office—I'd have done it in a second, just as I did at an earlier career turning point in 1979, when Billy Salomon and John Gutfreund told me to give up my sales/trading responsibilities and supervise the computer systems area. I was willing to do anything they wanted. It was a great organization and I would have been happy to stay. I'd never have left voluntarily: There'd be no reason to in good times, and I couldn't have abandoned them in bad times. Unfortunately (or fortunately for me, as it turned out), staying wasn't an option.

Afterward, I didn't sit around wondering what was happening at the old firm. I didn't go back and visit. I never look over my shoulder. Once finished: Gone. Life continues!

* * *

Although Phibro technically bought Salomon, Salomon soon ran the combined companies. The power shifted with record speed. Phibro took over when the transaction occurred, and Phibro became Phibro-Salomon. As the securities business boomed, the commodities business collapsed. Soon the entity became Salomon Inc., with Phibro Energy and Philipp Brothers as subsidiaries. The Philipp name went back to the obscurity it had had five years earlier. The acquirer never knew what hit it. The acquiree dominated almost from day one. A total mismatch.

With the merger, the Salomon partners got their freedom and their fortunes, but in the process, they ended their own firm as it had existed for decades. By losing control of its key employees, Salomon destroyed its greatest strength. Until then, partners had a long-term, firmwide perspective insured by the golden handcuffs of a ten-year capital “lock-in.” After the merger, everyone was just a hired gun. Today, at Salomon, as at Phibro, virtually all who were there at the time of the merger are gone. The then-partners may have gotten rich, and today the resulting combined organization may be doing very well, but both old-line companies “lost” in the end.

* * *

I went to see Billy Salomon a week after the merger was announced. “So long, thanks for everything, and goodbye” was the purpose. He was not happy. He was, in fact, furious and embittered that “his” firm had been sold and that he had had no part in the decision.

“You screwed me,” he said.

“Billy, these were your rules. You dictated years ago that nonexecutive general partners and all limited partners [as he had then become] had no say. You decided that the Executive Committee ruled absolutely. You personally picked every one of its members. Rightly or wrongly, they’re your legacy. They made this decision to merge, not the rest of us.”

I never thought Billy had a real bitch. One of style maybe, but not of substance. John and the Executive Committee had a responsibility to do what they thought was right for the firm—which is to say, for its owners. Billy had selected the people who made the decision. They followed the rules he had set. He just didn’t anticipate or like the results.

The Last Supper

Although I did say “So long” to Billy Salomon, my recollection is that John Gutfreund didn’t say goodbye to me. The next time I saw him was seven years later at the surprise fiftieth birthday party for Jack Kugler, our former partner. “Hello, young man, and how are you?” he said to me.

“Fine, and younger than you.”

“You always were a wiseass.”

That was it. Thanks, John. He had hired me as a fresh MBA when I needed a job—and he had fired me when my era there had really passed. In both instances, his timing was impeccable.

Even though my Salomon career ended involuntarily, I owe a great debt to William Salomon and John Gutfreund. They were my mentors. They taught me ethics, philanthropy, hard work, and to take care of others. They encouraged me to strive for success and supported me fully, even when I failed. They gave me the opportunity to prove myself, not to mention the chance to walk away with an almost unseemly fortune, which I used later to start my own firm. Given all the people Salomon Brothers employed over the years, there are myriad others who must feel the same about both of them.

Though their careers ended very differently, Billy (who retired voluntarily) and John (forced out when an underling cooked the books) have both made their respective contributions. Wall Street is a better place because of their efforts—and I’m a smarter, better (and richer) person because of them. To this day, I consider them both friends.

* * *

During the week after the Salomon partners’ last supper in Tarrytown, I went to a furrier on Third Avenue and ordered a sable jacket for my wife, Sue. We had been married for five years at that point, during which time I was a Wall Street star. Unfortunately, from that Tarrytown dinner onward, when she met somebody in the street and was asked, “What does your husband do?” she’d be tempted to answer something like, “Well, he used to be a very important Salomon Brothers partner.” The sable would be a surprise to get her mind onto something else.

Bloomberg by Bloomberg

While I was never embarrassed to say that I’d been fired and was now running a small start-up business, I’m tougher than many others (or, perhaps as a psychological defense mechanism, I have convinced myself not to care what others think). But I was worried that Sue might be ashamed of my new, less visible status and concerned I couldn’t support the family. A sable jacket seemed to say, “No sweat. We can still eat. We’re still players.”

I asked the furrier to stay open until 7:30 P.M. on my last day of work, September 30, 1981, and I put in my normal twelve hours. On the way home, I picked up the jacket. Sue was delighted. We drank a bottle of champagne, gave our daughter, Emma, a kiss, and went out to dinner. Next morning, I started Bloomberg, the company. The rest is work in progress.

Capitalism, Here I Come

School, Work, and Hard Knocks

It was a long way to that Tarrytown conference center from the place I began my journey. The child of hard-working middle-class parents—my father was an accountant at a dairy, my mother a woman of liberal views and independent mind—I wasn't exactly preordained from birth to make a big success of myself on Wall Street or anywhere else. But as a child, from them I learned hard work, intellectual curiosity, and the ambition to strive relentlessly for the goals I set—all of which would serve me in good stead at school, during my capitalist education at Salomon, and in creating my own company later on.

The town of Medford, Massachusetts, was a blue-collar community outside of Boston. Its city-run high school (I was class of 1960) had 250 students in each grade. Very few went to college. Vocational training was the main mission. I was totally bored until my senior year, when the school started two "honors" courses—one in history and one in literature. For the first time, I was interested in and challenged by my studies.

The history teacher made current events come alive, especially those politically controversial events in America's past that he told us had never before been taught in government-supported education. One event was the labor struggle in the 1920s, exemplified by the trial of anarchists Sacco and Vanzetti. He described how his mother went each day to the courthouse to listen (the predecessor of today's Court TV), how some thought them heroes and others thought them the Antichrist. But by bringing his own family into it, the instructor made history real and relevant, not just something to read and memorize. Similarly with literature: The English teacher helped us analyze the world's great books instead of teaching spelling and grammar (two things I never did learn thoroughly). Discussing the meaning of the story versus memorizing the plot made the difference—fascinating versus boring. Both classes broadened my perspective: The exposure to non-politically-correct history and culture opened my eyes to a whole new world. What a shame all the preceding time was partially wasted. Somehow, we as a society must find a way to better engage our children in the joys of learning. Generation after generation of functional illiterates we don't need.

Bloomberg by Bloomberg

Outside of school, in my early years, I remember reading Johnny Tremain, a novel about a teenage messenger and spy for the Yankee rebels in Boston in 1776. I must have read it a hundred times and often took the subway downtown to visit the Revolutionary War sites the story mentioned. I thought of myself as the hero patriot, sticking it to old George III—a maverick role I still try to emulate. I developed a sense of history and its legacy, and remain annoyed at how little people seem to learn from the past; how we fight the same battles over and over; how we can't remember what misguided, shortsighted policies led to depression, war, oppression, and division. As citizens, we continually let elected officials pander for votes with old, easy, flawed solutions to complex problems. As voters, we repeatedly forget the lessons of others who didn't hold their chosen officials accountable. God help us if George Santayana was right and we're doomed to repeat it all again.

Capitalism, Here I Come

Being a Boy Scout brought together my sense of community with my ambitions of personal accomplishment. I loved it. I savored earning every merit badge, took pride in achieving every rank. I was one of the youngest Eagle Scouts in that organization's history. Boy Scout summer camp was the highlight of the year. I paid for my lodging there by selling our troop's Christmas wreaths door-to-door (my first selling experience). Accommodations were two-man tents under the stars for six weeks in the wilds of New Hampshire. A bugle blew reveille in the morning. We showered under ice-cold water. The food was hot dog and hamburger fare in a big mess hall where everyone took turns peeling potatoes, setting the tables, doing the dishes. I remember loving meals, particularly the grape-flavored punch called "bug juice." Daily, there were riflery, archery, rowing, canoeing, swimming, art, ceramics, and dozens of other games and skills. Hikes and river trips were the highlight of the week—and parents came to bothersome visiting days only once or twice in the whole summer. It was the time I learned both to be self-sufficient and, simultaneously, to live and work with others.

On Saturday mornings in the winter, I went to the Boston Museum of Science for lectures that introduced the natural and physical world in a way my school could not. Each week, for two hours, I sat spellbound as an instructor brought snakes, porcupines, and owls for us to hold; demonstrated the basic laws of physics with hands-on experiments; and quizzed us on every museum exhibit. All the kids—including me—tried to show off by having every answer. This competition taught the value of precise observation, attention to detail, and careful listening. Once the question concerned the age of a tree whose five-foot cross section was displayed in the museum upstairs. The exhibit had great historical events marked by a light bulb at each appropriate tree ring, from the current-day outside circle back to the tree's germination, centuries earlier, at the center of the display. The question was asked about "the redwood tree." We were suitably frustrated by an instructor who refused to accept what we all knew was the "right" answer, until someone realized the tree cross section was not from a redwood at all, but rather from a giant sequoia—a related but slightly different variety. Listen, question, test, think: Those instructors taught me the value of intellectual honesty and scholarship years before college.

* * *

While in high school, I worked after class, on weekends, and during summers for a small electronics company in Cambridge, Massachusetts. The technical genius of the company recommended Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. I was interested in science, and she knew people at the school's Applied Physics Laboratory. Since I had to go to college some place, why not? I sent in an application and was accepted in due course. The way things worked out, Hopkins probably isn't sorry it gave me a chance. And I was never sorry I matriculated there.

Academically, I was a mediocre student in college, more from a lack of motivation than natural aptitude, or so I hope. Mostly, my grades were Cs (average) in engineering, but during my senior year, I took double the normal course load and earned almost all top-of-the-class As. Nevertheless, I did little more than read the books, listen to the lectures, understand what was said, and parrot it back. Never did I think I could have gone out and originated the material. I hadn't the interest or intellect to be a real engineer, physicist, or mathematician. What I really liked doing—and what I was good at—was dealing with people. I became president of my fraternity, president of the Inter-Fraternity Council, class president, and all-around Big Man On Campus. I learned how to campaign for office while seeking elected school positions. I developed organizational abilities when I planned school dances and fraternity parties. I practiced building consensus and getting people to work together as I ran various school-related extracurricular organizations. All these skills helped me later at Salomon Brothers on Wall Street and eventually with my own company.