About the Authors

Charles H. Vivian received his B.A. from Brown University and his M.A. and Ph.D. from Harvard. He has held faculty positions at both these institutions and at Southern Methodist and Tufts universities; he is teaching now at the Bentley College of Accounting and Finance. His work has been mainly in the teaching of composition and the supervision of such teaching, and also in teaching, research, and publication in English literature of the Romantic and early Victorian period.

Bernetta M. Jackson received her B.A. from McKendree College and M.A. in English from the University of Illinois. She formerly taught at Southern Methodist University in Dallas and now teaches at Washington University in Saint Louis. Mrs. Jackson has been a member of the College Section Committee of the National Council of Teachers of English, an adviser to the editorial staff of College English, and an English language consultant for the National Board of Medical Examiners. She is a member of the Modern Language Association of America, the Conference on College Composition and Communication, the College English Association, and the American Association of University Professors.

Acknowledgments

The authors would like to express thanks to a number of colleagues for help in the preparation of this volume. It was partly at the instance of Professor Ima H. Herron of Southern Methodist University that they undertook the project initially. For critical reading of several chapters of the manuscript, they are grateful to Professor George D. Stout of Washington University; they wish especially to acknowledge his assistance in the chapter on the research paper. For valuable suggestions on the list of reference works, they are indebted to Miss Marjorie Karlson, Chief of the Reference Library; and, for checking particular lists, to Professors William H. Connor and Arthur W. Mason, all of Washington University. Finally, innumerable pieces of information, advice, and guidance were among the contributions of Mrs. Mary F. Johnson of the Barnes & Noble editorial staff.
