INTRODUCTION

In the preparation of this book, it has become clear that most readers have an interest in dates in one way or another: from the obvious personal anniversaries to the wider awareness of historical events of lesser or greater significance. It is also undoubtedly the information about the people and happenings behind the dates which gives them their particular attraction and makes their listing so much more than a straightforward catalogue or directory. (There are, too, a remarkable number of fascinating coincidences concerning birthdays and other occurrences on certain days of the year, though no claims are made for any astrological significance in this respect.)

The book's two main sections are intended to give easy references to the dates and their associated details in both day-by-day and chronological order. In addition there is a very extensive index which, apart from its main function, could be seen as a 'good read' in itself.

Inevitably, if only for reasons of finite space, there are some names and items which the reader will look for in vain; but it has been the intention to cover as wide a field of interest as possible. Some items, however, have been deliberately omitted because of the lack of certainty about the dates; and in the instances of dates being duplicated through the introduction of the Gregorian calendar, the usual convention of taking the New Style has been generally followed. (For fuller details of this aspect the reader may refer to 'Gregorian calendar' in the index of this book.)

INTRODUCTION TO THE SECOND EDITION

This updated and enlarged edition of the dictionary has afforded more scope for recording dates of birth and significant deaths, as well as events. I have been able to respond to the criticisms of the first edition from readers and critics, who felt that certain dates should have been included. For this new edition, readers will surely understand that the boundaries of the dictionary have to be drawn somewhere. The policy of omitting dates which carry some doubt has been maintained.

As a result of all the additions, the index has become even more important, especially with the increased number of useful cross-references.

JANUARY &

& 1 January

THIS day was first recognized as New Year's Day with the introduction of the Gregorian calendar in France, Italy, Portugal, and Spain in 1582; yet it was not until 1752 that the New Style was adopted in Britain.

The oldest existing London daily newspaper, The Times, was first published on this day in 1788, replacing the Daily Universal Register, which had been in circulation for three years; and in 1814 the first Welsh-language newspaper, Seren Gomer, was published in Swansea.

Born on this day were: Paul Revere (1735–1818), the American patriot and folk hero of the War of Independence (see 18 Apr.); the British novelist Maria Edgeworth (1767–1849); A(rthur) H(ugh) Clough (1819–61), the English poet especially remembered for 'The Latest Decalogue' and the verse 'Thou shalt not kill; but need'st not strive / Officiously to keep alive' (frequently quoted by advocates of euthanasia); Baron Pierre de Coubertin (1863–1937), the French sportsman who revived the Olympic Games in Greece; the English novelist E(dward) M(organ) Forster (1879–1970); J(ohn) Edgar Hoover (1895–1972), the director of the FBI from 1924 until his death; Harold Adrian Russell 'Kim' Philby (1912–88), the British double agent known as 'the third man'; and the British playwright Joe Orton (1933–67).

In 1909 the first payments of old age pensions in Great Britain were made, with all persons over the age of 70 with an annual income of less than £21 receiving five shillings a week.

& 2 January

ON this day . . . in 1839 the French photographic pioneer Louis Daguerre took the first photograph of the moon (in Paris); and in 1959 the Russian artificial satellite Luna I, the first rocket to pass the moon, was launched from Tyuratam.

Born on this day were: General James Wolfe (1727–59), the British soldier and hero of the battle of Quebec; Mily Alexeyevich Baldkirev (1837–1910), the Russian composer and leader of the group of national Russian composers known as ‘the Five’ (the others were Borodin, Cui, Mussorgsky, and Rimsky-Korsakov); Gilbert Murray (1866–1957), the Australian-born scholar who became the chairman of the League of Nations 1923–38; Arthur William Charles ‘Wentworth’ Gore (1868–1928), the English tennis player who appeared at Wimbledon on every occasion from 1888 to 1927 and was the men’s singles champion in 1901, 1908, and 1909, when he became the oldest winner of the championship; the English composer Sir Michael Tippett (1905–); and Isaac Asimov (1920–92), the American scientist and author of science fiction.

ON this day ... in 1911 what came to be known as ‘the Sidney Street Siege’ was witnessed by two future British prime ministers: one of them was Clement Attlee, whose 28th birthday it happened to be; and the other was Winston Churchill, at that time the Home Secretary and personally involved in the proceedings. (The incident was a sequel to ‘the Houndsditch murders’ of 16 December, in which three police officers had been shot, and the siege ended when the house was burned down with its occupants as the police and the military were attempting to storm the building.)

Born on this day were: James Bridie (1888–1951), the Scottish dramatist whose real name was Osborne Henry Mavor and who used the pseudonym of ‘Mary Henderson’ for his first play; Herbert Morrison, later Lord Morrison of Lambeth (1888–1965), who was a cabinet minister in both the Churchill and Attlee administrations; John Ronald Reuel Tolkien (1892–1973), the philologist and author of the mythological tales The Hobbit and The Lord of the Rings; and the Danish-born pianist and entertainer Victor Borge (1909–).

William Joyce, the British traitor who had broadcast for the Nazi regime in World War II, known as ‘Lord Haw-Haw’ from his affected ‘upper-class’ drawl, was hanged at Wandsworth Prison in 1946.

In 1959 Alaska was admitted to the Union as the forty-ninth state.

4 January

BORN on this day were: Jacob Grimm (1785–1863), the German philologist who invented the word ‘umlaut’ (but is best known for his Fairy Tales, written with his brother Wilhelm); Louis Braille (1809–52), the Frenchman who invented and gave his name to the universal system of reading and writing for the blind (and was himself blind from the age of 3); and Sir Isaac Pitman (1813–97), the Englishman who invented the shorthand system named after him.

Also born on this day were: Josef Suk (1874–1935), the Czech composer who was the son-in-law of Dvorak; the Welsh painter Augustus John (1878–1961); C(yril) L(ionel) R(obert) James (1901–89), the West Indian writer on cricket and racial discrimination; Jane Wyman (1914–), the American actress who was the first wife of the US president Ronald Reagan; the American Soprano Grace Bumbry (1937–); and the American boxer Floyd Patterson (1935–), who was the youngest world heavyweight champion when he won the title in 1956 and the first to regain the title, in 1960.

In 1938 the circus was first televised with Bertram Mills’ Circus transmitted live from Olympia. (And since this was also the first time that pictures were shown of the paying public at any event, the customers were informed that they could, if they so desired, be seated out of the cameras’ range!) In 1960 the French writer Albert Camus was killed in a car accident; and in 1967 the British racing motorist Donald Campbell was killed attempting to establish a new water-speed record on Coniston Water, in the Lake District.

5 January

BORN on this day were: the Italian pianist Arturo Benedetti Michelangeli (1920–95); the Austrian-born pianist Alfred Brendel (1931–), who is an honorary KBE; and the Italian pianist Maurizio Pollini (1942–).

Also born on this day were: King Camp Gillette (1855–1932), the American inventor of the safety razor; Konrad Adenauer (1876–1967), the first chancellor of West Germany, in 1949; HRH Jean, the Grand

Duke of Luxembourg (1921–); Zulfikar Ali Bhutto (1928–79), the president of Pakistan who was executed for conspiring to murder a political rival; HM King Juan Carlos of Spain (1938–); and Mansur Ali Khan, formerly the Nawab of Pataudi (1941–), the former Indian cricket captain.

The Antarctic explorer Sir Ernest Shackleton died at South Georgia on his fourth and last expedition in 1920–2; and in 1941 the pioneer air-woman Amy Johnson was drowned after baling out of her aircraft over the Thames Estuary.

6 January

IN 1540 Henry VIII was married to his fourth wife Anne of Cleves. (The marriage was declared null and void after some six months: 'The King found her so different from her picture... that... he swore they had brought him a Flanders mare.')

Born on this day were: Richard II (1367–1400), the eighth and last of the Plantagenet kings of England; Percival Pott (1714–88), the English surgeon who gave his name to a fracture and a disease; Gustave Doré (1832–83), the French painter and illustrator; the German composer Max Bruch (1838–1920); the Russian composer Alexander Scriabin (1872–1915), whose nephew was the Russian revolutionary leader Molotov; the American poet Carl Sandburg (1878–1967); and Tom Mix (1880–1940), the Texas ranger and US marshal who became one of the best-known film actors in 'Westerns' with his horse 'Tony'.

7 January

ON this day... in 1558 Calais was finally taken from the British by the French, under the Duke of Guise; and the first Channel crossing by air was made from Dover to Calais by the Frenchman Jean-Pierre Blanchard and the American Dr John Jeffries in a hydrogen balloon, in 1785.

Born on this day were: Jacques Étienne Montgolfier (1745–99), the French inventor who with his brother Joseph Michel Montgolfier built the first successful hot-air balloon, in 1783; the German inventor Johann Philipp Reis (1834–74), who first demonstrated an electrical telephone in 1861 (fifteen years before Bell's invention was patented); and Arthur Clifford Hartley (1889–1960), the English inventor of World War II's PLUTO (Pipeline under the Ocean) and FIDO (Fog Investigation Dispersal Operation).

Also born on this day were: Millard Fillmore (1800–74), the thirteenth US president, who came to office on the death of Zachary Taylor, in 1850; Adolph Zukor (1873–1976), the Hungarian-born pioneer of the film industry and its first centenarian; the French composer Francis Poulenc (1899–1963); the English dramatist and actor Arnold Ridley (1896–1984), who latterly achieved fame as one of the members of television's Dad's Army; and Gerald Durrell (1925–95), the zoologist and writer and younger brother of the writer Lawrence Durrell.

ELVIS PRESLEY (1935–77), the American singer known as 'the king of rock 'n' roll', was born on this day; and two other popular singers, Shirley Bassey (1937–) and David Bowie (1947–), share his birthday.

Also born on this day were: Wilkie Collins (1824–89), the English novelist who introduced the first detective in fiction, 'Sergeant Cuff', in his novel The Moonstone; James Craig, the first Viscount Craigavon (1871–1940), the first prime minister of Northern Ireland; Dennis Wheatley (1897–1977), the English novelist and inventor; and Georgi Malenkov (1902–88), the Soviet leader who succeeded Stalin in 1953.

9 January

BORN on this day were: John Jervis, the Earl of St Vincent (1735–1823), the British admiral who took his title from the third battle of St Vincent, in 1797; Jeanette 'Jennie' Jerome, Lady Randolph Churchill (1854–1921), Sir Winston Churchill's American-born mother; Karel Čapek (1890–1938), the Czech writer who introduced the word 'robot' into the language, in his play RUR (Rossum's Universal Robots); Dame

Gracie Fields (1898–1979), the English singer and comedienne who became internationally famous; the thirty-seventh US president Richard Milhous Nixon (1913–94), who was the first to resign his office, in 1974; and the American singer Joan Baez (1941–).

In 1972 the Queen Elizabeth, for more than thirty years the world's largest passenger liner, was gutted by fire in Hong Kong harbour.

ON this day . . . in 1645 the archbishop of Canterbury William Laud was beheaded on Tower Hill, having been found 'guilty of endeavouring to subvert the laws, to overthrow the Protestant religion, and to act as an enemy to Parliament'. (It was to be more than fifteen years before the next archbishop was appointed, with the Restoration of Charles II.)

In 1840 the 'penny post' (the British system of delivering mail at a standard charge, regardless of distance) came into operation. This coincided with the introduction of the first correspondence course, which was for Isaac Pitman's system of shorthand; and in 1863 the first underground railway, London's Underground Metropolitan Railway, was opened to fare-paying passengers, with trains running at fifteen-minute intervals from Farringdon Street to Paddington.

Born on this day were: the historian and politician Lord Acton (1834–1902), who told us that 'Power tends to corrupt and absolute power corrupts absolutely'; Charles Adrien Wettach (1880–1959), the Swiss clown known as 'Grock'; Dame Barbara Hepworth (1903–75), the British sculptor; and Galina Ulanova (1910–), the Russian ballerina.

11 January

ON this day . . . in 1922 insulin was first administered to a diabetic patient (a 14-year-old Canadian boy, Leonard Thompson), who went on to lead a normal life. (It was only the previous year that the Canadian physiologists Frederick Grant Banting and Charles Herbert Best had discovered and isolated the hormone.)

Another Canadian, Sir John Alexander Macdonald (1815–91), the first prime minister of Canada (in 1867), was born on this day (in Glasgow).

Also born on this day were: William James (1842–1910), the American philosopher and brother of the novelist Henry James; the Norwegian composer Christian Sinding (1856–1941), best remembered for his piano composition Rustle of Spring; Fred Archer (1857–86), the British jockey whose 2,749 winning mounts included five Derby winners; and Alan Paton (1903–88), the South African writer best remembered for his novel Cry, the Beloved Country.

✂ 12 January

ON this day . . . in 1866 the Aeronautical Society of Great Britain (now the Royal Aeronautical Society) was established, fourteen years after the first such organization, the Société Aérostatique de France, and thirty-seven years before the first successful powered flight by the Wright Brothers, in 1903.

Jean Joseph Étienne Lenoir, the Frenchman who invented the first practical internal combustion engine (which of course made powered flight possible), was born in 1822, though he died in 1900, some three years before his invention was used to power an aeroplane.

Also born on this day were: Edmund Burke (1729–97), the British statesman and philosopher; Johann Heinrich Pestalozzi (1746–1827), the Swiss educational reformer and philanthropist; the American painter John Singer Sargent (1856–1925); the American novelist Jack London (1876–1916); and Hermann Goering (1893–1946), the Nazi who became Marshal of the Reich under Hitler and was sentenced to death as a war criminal.

ON this day . . . in 1910 opera was first heard on the radio on the first 'outside broadcast', with a performance of Mascagni's Cavalleria rusticana and Leoncavallo's Pagliacci from the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. (Caruso sang the role of Canio in 'Pag'.)

Born on this day were: the Australian singer Peter Dawson (1882–1961), who made the first of 3,000 or more recordings in 1904 and was also a successful songwriter (as J. P. McCall); Lord ‘Ted’ Willis (1918–92), the English playwright and novelist who created the best-known British bobby, ‘Dixon of Dock Green’; and Michael Bond (1926–), the English writer for children who created ‘Paddington Bear’.

14 January

BORN on this day were: Ludwig von Köchel (1800–77), the Austrian botanist and musicologist who classified and gave the initial letter of his surname to the works of Mozart; Dr Albert Schweitzer (1875–1965), the French philosopher, musician, and medical missionary who founded the Lambaréné Hospital in French Equatorial Africa; Hugh Lofting (1886–1947), the British-born writer who created ‘Dr Dolittle’; Hal Roach (1892–1992), the American film producer, especially of comic films, and centenarian of the industry; Sir Cecil Beaton (1904–80), the photographer, writer, and theatrical designer who created the scenery and costumes for My Fair Lady, Gigi, etc.; and the English actor Warren Mitchell (1926–), who created the role of ‘Alf Garnett’, the bigoted British proletarian.

15 January

BORN on this day were: William Prout (1785–1850), the English physician and chemist who anticipated the atomic theory; and Edward Teller (1908–), the Hungarian-born American scientist known as ‘the father of the hydrogen bomb’.

In 1962, the centigrade or Celsius scale was first used in the British Meteorological Office weather forecasts, more than 200 years after the death of the Swedish scientist who invented and gave his name to the scale.

Also born on this day were: Ivor Novello (1893–1951), the Welsh composer and actor; and Martin Luther King (1929–68), the American civil rights leader and Nobel peace prize recipient for 1964.

The Irish Free State was established in 1922.

ON this day . . . in 1780 the Duke of Clarence, the third son of George III and later William IV, took part in the second battle of Cape St Vincent as a midshipman (and was subsequently known as 'the Sailor King'); and in 1809, at the battle of Corunna, in Spain, Sir John Moore was mortally wounded in his moment of victory over the French under Marshal Soult and his burial ('darkly at dead of night') is commemorated in the poem by Charles Wolfe. ('Slowly and sadly we laid him down, | From the field of his fame fresh and gory; | We carved not a line, and we raised not a stone, | But we left him alone with his glory.'))

Robert Service (1874–1958), the English-born poet and novelist known as 'the Canadian Kipling', was born on this day; the American poet Laura Riding (1901–91); and the English poet Edmund Spenser, known as 'the Poets' Poet', died in 1599. (His exact date of birth is not known.)

☞ 17 January

ON this day . . . in 1746, at the battle of Falkirk, 'Bonnie Prince Charlie' and his Highlanders had their last victory in the Forty-five Jacobite uprising before their eventual defeat at Culloden three months afterwards; and in 1991 the 'Gulf War' began with air raids on Iraq by allied US, British, and Saudi forces to liberate Kuwait.

Born on this day were: Benjamin Franklin (1706–90), the American statesman, philosopher, and scientist (who invented the lightning-conductor); Anne Brontë (1820–49), the English poet and novelist and the youngest of the Brontë sisters of Haworth; David Lloyd George, the first Earl Lloyd-George (1863–1945), British prime minister 1916–22; David Beatty, the first Earl Beatty (1871–1936), the commander of the British battle cruisers at the battle of Jutland in 1916; Mack Sennett (1880–1960), the American silent-film producer, especially remembered for the 'Keystone Cops'; the British novelist Sir Compton Mackenzie (1883–1972); Tommy Handley (1892–1949), the English comedian who became famous for his wartime radio programme ITMA ('It's That Man Again'); the notorious American gangster Al(phonse) Capone

(1899–1947); the British novelist Nevil Shute (1899–1960); A(lfred) Wainwright (1907–91), the writer and illustrator of England's Lake District; and Muhammad Ali (1942–), formerly known as Cassius Clay, the American world heavyweight boxing champion who was the first to regain the title three times.

18 January

ON this day . . . in 1778 Captain James Cook discovered the Hawaiian Islands, naming them the 'Sandwich Islands', after Lord Sandwich, the First Lord of the Admiralty at that time; and in 1912 Captain Robert Falcon Scott and his party reached the South Pole to discover that the expedition led by the Norwegian explorer Amundsen had reached it a month before.

Three celebrated English writers of books for children were born on this day: A(lan) A(lexander) Milne (1882–1956), creator of 'Winnie the Pooh'; Arthur Ransome (1884–1967); and Raymond Briggs (1934–), who also illustrates his books.
