University Life — Do's and Don'ts

DO — Organize your time

University is completely different to school in that when it comes to work, you're generally left to your own devices. No one will motivate you to actually do anything, and worst of all, there's no sympathy for late work. You will get a zero mark for any work handed in after the deadline. The trick is to plan your time, and get work out of the way early and get more time to go out! Remember, you can be as flexible with your time as you like but you'll always need to make sure you get out of bed for lectures, meet essay and project deadlines, and schedule in plenty of revision days before exams.

DON'T — Think you're on your own

That first week of university can be daunting, away from home with hundreds of complete strangers, and all your mates nowhere near. However, just remember that everyone is in the same boat, all as nervous as each other, so just go up to people and say 'hi'. They'll be just as glad for someone to talk to as you are. Plus, you'll meet people on the first day who will be mates for life. University is one great melting pot of personalities, and it's amazing how quickly everyone fits in. -

DO — Get involved

One of the unique aspects of university is the sheer amount of different interests represented. The students' union will run loads of sports clubs and societies. Joining one is the best way to get a social life, as they run all kinds of events for their members. They're all student-run too, and getting involved in their organization will give you great opportunities to practice yourself, to make friends and add a bit of sparkle to your CV. It's something to impress the society when you go job hunting.

DO — Spend your money carefully

Being a student is an expensive business. Not only do you have to pay your tuition, you have to find money for, clothes, food, course materials and of course, going out! The best way to achieve the balance is to work out the money coming in (student loan, scholarship and part-time work) and prioritize the money going out. Remember, it's no fun getting a square banquet one night when it means you're living on beans or toast for a month. Try every means to make ends meet. Don't make money become a problem that haunts you day and night. Plus, getting a degree makes sense in the long run — graduates earn more and are more likely to get a job than people without a degree.

DO — Learn to tolerate others

Learning to live with another person in the close quarters of a room is a very important part of your college experience. This may be the first time you've had to share a room with someone of your own age, with someone you've just met, or for that matter with anyone at all. Living in a dormitory is probably one of the most fun periods you'll have in your life. However, you'll discover every annoying habit known to man in your roommates! Here is where you learn the great art of communication and compromise. Mom doesn't live here, but you do. The neatnik will have to learn to tolerate life's imperfections. The slob, well, it's time to start picking up after yourself. Try to have a bit of respect for your mates by not messing the room up, doing your share of the cleaning, and not staying up till 1 a. m. and putting the stereo on at full blast when there's an exam the next day.

DON'T — Copy work

Universities are very particular about this, and claiming some other person's work as your own is the quickest way to get thrown out of college. They've even got a special word for it — plagiarism. You may think that no-one will notice that a paragraph of your essay was really from an obscure journal written in another country but honestly, people do notice.

Using other people's work is perfectly acceptable, but you must credit them (called referencing). Sharing your work with others is also a risky practice. If your mate's work resembles yours too much then it may even be you accused of plagiarism. Last but not least, don't cheat in exams.

DON'T — Be afraid to share a problem

You're well looked after as a student. If things are going wrong, the university and students' union have all kinds of support services to help you out, from financial advisers to psychological counsellors. The services are free, and entirely confidential. If you've got a problem with your course, you'll have a course tutor who will be able to sort things out. Most problems at university can be solved fairly easily — the biggest problem is students sitting on them until they're all out of proportion.

DO — Get the balance right

Ultimately, you're at university to get an academic qualification. You've also got unparalleled opportunities to do everything except academic work! It's just a matter of striking the right balance between them both. Going out every night is fine for a while, but it's all a waste of time if you start failing exams. Non-academic involvement is great for your CV, but you still need the degree at the end of it all. That's right, university life is about learning. You'll be expected to go to all your lectures and classes. Most courses are assessed through exams, essays, practical work and projects. You'll have anything from one to five hours of lectures, etc, in a day. But on top of that, you are expected to do a number of hours of self study. If you plan your time and your workload, you'll have plenty of free time to enjoy student life.

DO — Enjoy yourself!

You'll never have so many opportunities and a commitment-free period in your life like this again, so make the most of it! Universities are usually located in a lively city buzzing with events, cinemas, clubs and bars (often with great student discounts and special offers), so you'll never be short of things to do. There are all kinds of fringe benefits of going to college than just the studying, so get involved, and as the famous advert said, "just do it!"

Text B

Making the Transition to University Life

- 1 One of the major turning points in many peoples' lives is leaving school and commencing university life. Studying at University not only means adjusting to a new way of learning, but also a new way of living. Many students travel from the various provinces throughout the country. There are many adjustments to make a lively and diverse new campus environment to negotiate, new accommodation away from the familiar surroundings of home and many new people to meet both fellow students and lecturers. Small things, like knowing where to catch a bus, buy fresh food or go swimming, will all be part of your new experience.
- 2 To assist students with their transition to university life, universities usually have special orientation programs and sessions aimed at assisting students adjust to being at university. In addition to the formal orientation programs offered, new students are strongly urged to talk with students who have already been in the university for a while and have had a chance to "learn the ropes".
- 3 While adjusting to university life can be exciting and fun, it can also be an unsettling period of confusion, particularly if you are feeling homesick and too shy to ask questions about aspects of university life you are uncertain about. Even new students who appear to be outgoing and confident usually experience feelings of uncertainty from time to time, so don't feel alone.

- 4 The best way to overcome these feelings is to share them with other students. Your old school-friends and family may not be close by anymore, but university life offers you a wonderful opportunity to make a wide circle of new and interesting friends from all over the regions. Many of these people will remain your friends and colleagues for the rest of your life.
- 5 As you settle into university life, everything that at first seemed so foreign and strange will become more familiar. Adjusting to this change will help you to grow and develop as a person by exposing you to a bigger world full of different views and new insights.
- 6 If you have arrived at a university straight from school, one of the biggest surprises you will find is the academic freedom you have at the university. At school, your teachers probably closely supervised your attendance, classwork and homework. At university, it is expected that you are here because you want to be here and you are enthusiastic about learning. If you don't turn up to lectures or tutorials, or fail to hand in assignments, nobody is going to 'punish' you. The only person who will lose out will be you. Whether you are a private fee-paying student or you have been awarded a scholarship to attend the university, the only person who is ultimately responsible for whether you will succeed or fail at university is you.
- 7 This means you need to take a responsible approach to learning. Find out all you can about the academic rules and regulations, turn up to your lectures regularly, ensure you understand the structure and content of your academic programs, hand in your assignments in time and make sure you prepare well for examinations. If you put in your best effort, you will not only be personally satisfied but you will also probably perform well academically.
- 8 University class sizes may also surprise you. At school, you may have sat in a room with between 30 or 40 other students. By comparison, some lectures at university can seat more than several hundred students! Lectures tend to be large, but they are supplemented by smaller tutorial groups which have a more 'cosy' atmosphere and give you the opportunity to ask questions about issues raised in the lecture with your tutor or lecturer.
- 9 Another big difference about studying at university is the expectation that you will not just take notes from your lecturers but ask lots of questions. In some cultures it is traditionally considered impolite to question people in authority positions, such as lecturers, but at a university it is important that you ask questions and challenge theories so that you learn to become an analytical and independent thinker. Contrary to what you might believe, most lecturers enjoy teaching students who ask questions, challenge ideas and stimulate discussion. It gives them informal feedback about your academic progress and can also lead to new ideas being expressed, which is vital for an invigorating learning experience. Developing your communication skills at university will prove to be an invaluable asset in the workplace.

- 10 To study in a university also means you have to share a room with somebody you don't know before. Becoming someone's roommate could be the beginning of a very influential and personal relationship in your life. It is important that you make an effort to remain sincere and honest. Learn about your similarities and your differences. Don't be afraid to note the differences between yourselves. That's what distinguishes you as an individual. It is not necessary to share every aspect of college living. In fact, learning to tolerate each other's differences without infringing on each other's freedoms can be a valuable part of your education.
- 11 Sometimes, even good intentions do not lead to a good relationship! No matter how hard you try, communication sometimes breaks down. You might be receiving a subtle hint that this has happened when you find that your roommate doesn't want to talk to you, leaves the room whenever you enter, or complains to friends about you. If this happens, you can be fairly sure that there is some conflict which needs to be addressed. Don't ignore these signs of trouble. Take the first step in confronting your roommate in an effort to understand what is wrong. It may be something very simple that can easily be resolved, or it may be an issue on which you both have to work together.
- 12 Most conflicts arise from small personal irritations which, when not confronted immediately, grow into big problems. Honest and ongoing communication is critical! Check your behavior in a conflict situation. If you change your behavior, your roommate's behavior may also change. Not all conflicts can be resolved by the roommates themselves. When you need help, try to get assistance before the problem is overwhelming.
- 13 Finally, being at university means your classmates will vary in age, experience and cultural background. Not all students come to university straight from school. Many have already been out in the workforce for some time and decide to come to university to help advance their career path or to change careers altogether. Some students may have spent most of their life caring for family and are looking to begin a new career through university study. Regardless of the age differences, remember that you are all at university for the same
