ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The compilation and research of this book was a huge undertaking. It couldn't have been completed without the help of many dedicated people. Although I take the responsibility for any errors in Hollywood Song, I would like to share any success with many friends and coworkers who helped me.

First and foremost I would like to thank the many dedicated professionals at the various studios where I researched this project. I'm proud to report that no studio turned down my requests, and only one limited my access to their records. While researching the thousands of pieces of paper and cue sheets I grew to appreciate the tremendous work these music and legal departments undertake.

The first studio that allowed me access to their records was Paramount. I want to especially thank Ridge Walker for his enthusiasm and continued support. He and his staff taught me a lot about the music end of motion picture production and helped me get a foothold in the mountain of documents in the Paramount archives. Ridge and his excellent staff, Marc Miller, David Robles, and Charlee Hutton have my utmost respect and gratitude.

Special thanks also to Danny Gould at Warner Brothers and Susan de Christofaro of Twentieth Century-Fox who generously went out of their way to accommodate my requests. Thanks also to Carol Besso at Disney; Julian Bratolyubov, Mark Porter, and Terry Wolff at Universal; Andrew Velcoff and Cathy Manolis at Turner; Jill Coplan at Republic; Monica Ciafardini at Columbia; Steve Pena and Laurence Zwisohn at Twentieth Century-Fox. They were all helpful and kind.

My admiration and thanks to the professionals at the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences Margaret Herrick Library whose staff is too numerous to mention but who all are experts in both the history of the motion picture industry and in human interaction. They create a uniquely gracious atmosphere for the researcher and movie buff. Thanks too for special understanding to Ruth Spencer of the American Film Institute library.

Thanks to my parents, George and Florence Bloom, whom I can never repay for their love and support.

Thanks to Barry Kleinbart for helping me in California and for being such a close friend.

Thanks to my friends Harry Bagdasian, Kenny Bennett, Bari Biern Sedar, David Bishop, Adrian Bryan-Brown, Hap Erstein, Paul Ford, Sheila Formoy, Kit Grover, Karen Hopkins, Pat Jacobs, Ken Kantor, Paul Newman, Ezio Petersen, Guy Riddick, David Rose, Bill Rudman, Berthe Schuchat, Scott Sedar, Mike Shuster, David Simone, Robert Sixsmith, Bijou Spialek, Joseph Weiss, Max Woodward, Helene Blue, Denis Peshkov, Arthur Siegel, John Thornton, Doug Schulkind, Deborah Brody and Ellen Zeisler who saw me through the good times and bad and listened to me grouse. Thanks to old and new friends in L.A.: Denny Martin Flinn, Barbara Flinn, Ken Olfson, and Michael Shoop.

I'm blessed with a terrific agent, Heide Lange of Greenburger Associates, who deserves a paragraph of her own, and here it is. Thanks Heide for your encouragement, good advice, and friendship.

I'm sure I have forgotten to thank many individuals who helped me compile the enormous amount of material that has gone into making this book. If I have forgotten to thank you please accept my apologies and send your name to me care of Facts On File.

I N T R O D U C T I O N

This second volume of the American Song series (the first was on musical theater) includes data on songs from almost 7,000 American and foreign films. I attempted to track down all American made films and foreign films distributed in major release by American companies, unproduced films for which songs or scores were written, films in which instrumental pieces were later given lyrics, and silent films which had songs written for them.

Volumes 1 and 2 list all movies alphabetically. Volume 3 contains a chronological listing of titles and complete indexes to personnel and songs.

Most books on Hollywood musicals exclude rock musicals and cowboy pictures. Usually, short subjects are ignored, as are documentaries. I decided that to exclude any picture of any type would be presumptuous. After all, great songs have been written for rock pictures and for cowboy films. I decided to include all films except concert films, which usually do not have music written especially for them. Some concert films do have original songs—for example, Woodstock—and those are included. Cartoons are usually included under a generic heading (for example, “Popeye films”), since I couldn’t always ascertain which songs were written for which cartoons. Warner Brothers, Disney, and MGM cartoon cue sheets, however, do exist on a film by film basis, and their songs are listed under the film’s title.

No films are included if they were produced for video or went straight to video without a release. Films are also omitted if they contained a vocal but the song was not written for the film. For example, films containing only a vocal of a popular tune or public domain standard are excluded.

No information has been included unless it has been verified by programs, sheet music, censorship forms, reviews, scripts, publicity materials, production company records, demo discs, recording and dubbing schedules, publishers’ files, ASCAP or BMI lists, or by the composers or lyricists themselves.

Since viewing all the films made by American studios is impossible, and since many prints are incomplete, I used the motion picture companies’ cue sheets as my primary source. Songs may have been deleted from prints after the initial roadshow engagements or excised from television prints. But the cue sheets list the songs as they appeared in the films’ initial release. For many early films, cue sheets do not exist or are incomplete. In the early thirties cue sheets were pretty much standardized and their quality and reliability were improved.

I didn’t make a list of possible films and then look for those cue sheets. Instead in all but one instance (Columbia), I went through every available cue sheet. I also researched all available complementary records. I estimate that I examined over 15,000 cue sheets.

Cue sheets divide music cues into four categories: Background Vocals, Visual Vocals, Background Instrumentals, and Visual.

TITLE: The title of the film at its initial release is used. Previous titles, alternate titles, and foreign titles are included in the Notes section. If a date in parentheses follows a film’s title, it means another film shared the same title. It does not mean the second film had original songs.

STUDIO: For the most part films are credited to releasing companies, not production companies. Thus Goldwyn pictures may be credited under United Artists or MGM.

YEAR: Year of initial release is used. However, dates differ according to various sources. I tried to be as exact as possible, but sometimes a film might open on a limited basis in December for the holiday market and receive broad distribution the next year. Some films are released simply to accommodate contractual obligations and then withdrawn till a later date.

MUSIC SCORE: This category includes the composers of the background instrumental scores.

COMPOSER, LYRICIST: When the majority of a score’s songs are written by the same people, I have listed them under these headings instead of repeating their names beside their song titles. Any variations appear after the song in question.

CHOREOGRAPHER: This credit does not often appear on films that obviously have dancing. I tried to include as many as I could find.

PRODUCER: In the early thirties, usually the head of production or head of the studio was listed as Producer. I ignored this credit and usually credited the Associate Producer as the Producer. Later Producers received credit under that title. Some studio heads like Darryl Zanuck did directly oversee a few releases, and they are credited as Producers.

SCREENWRITER, DIRECTOR: These are the official credits according to what appears on the screen. Naturally many uncredited writers and even directors work on films but they are not included unless they did major work. For example, although many writers worked on The Wizard of Oz, only those with screen credit are listed. If a writer was credited with Additional Dialogue, in credits, I included him or her under the screenplay credits. If more than one director worked on a film, the Notes section indicates this.

SOURCE: These categories include the original source material upon which the film is based. These are the official sources, not including uncredited or ill disguised stealing of plots. I did not usually list if a film was a remake or a musicalization under these headings. That information appears under notes. If I list Musical under Source that means stage musical.

CAST: All stars are listed, as well as selected character actors and supporting players. If singing voices are dubbed, the dubbers are credited in the Notes section.

SONGS: This category includes all songs written expressly for the film. Songs that are interpolated and operatic arias are listed in the Notes section. Exceptions include interpolations with additional music or lyrics written expressly for the production.

NOTES: This heading includes miscellaneous information, such as other films in which a song appears, alternate titles, a song written but not used for a film, etc.
