INTRODUCTION

1 THE PURPOSE

When preparing lectures, in the spring of 1988, I was struck by the fact that collecting Security Council resolutions on one particular issue, throughout UN history – in order to analyse and compare their ever changing formulation – was a rather cumbersome and time-consuming operation, even if the numbers and dates of a series of resolutions were available. Every international lawyer – whether a diplomat, practitioner, student or researcher – inevitably had to consult the annual publication "Resolutions and Decisions of the Security Council", which fortunately contains a subject matter classification and a chronological checklist as well. To my surprise, a publication containing Security Council resolutions over the years, but classified on a topic basis, was not available, at least not to my knowledge; so perhaps the time had come to make an attempt to fill this gap.

The main purpose of this publication is basically to provide international lawyers looking for the texts of resolutions and statements of the Security Council on a particular topic with a useful, thematic guide containing the essential tools, presented in a chronological order, but classified on a topic basis to help us find and compare the English and French texts electronically through the UN home page. The user of this book should then be able to immediately start on the real and important tasks ahead: to take part in negotiations, to write papers or to prepare lectures, to carry out some real, thorough legal research based upon a comparative analysis, and perhaps even to draft opinions or judgments, on both the national and international level.

In the meantime, two editions of this work appeared in bookform, and the time had come to bring out a new edition. As the ever increasing number of Security Council resolutions and statements is nowadays easily available through the UN home page (http://www.un.org/documents/), it was decided to bring out a thematic guide in this amended form without the texts of the resolutions and statements being reproduced. Although a CD-ROM could be updated regularly and could contain a much larger number of texts than a book ever could, its potential usefulness for our purposes has been overtaken by new technological developments.

The sheer expansion of Security Council activity during the last decade made it virtually impossible to include in this publication updated introductory notes introducing the topic at hand in the most neutral and objective way possible.

2 THE KIND OF MATERIAL COLLECTED

Traditionally, international lawyers wish to have before them all the necessary material before embarking upon their practical and/or academic analysis. Dealing with Security Council activities inevitably leads to the recognition that it is sometimes necessary, in order to make any valuable assessment of the Council's performance, to look at statements as well. There is an ever-increasing tendency to resort to this kind of instrument; the statements are read out by the President of the Security Council on behalf of the members of the Council¹ preceded by all kinds of formulae (expressing their views on the matter; expressing or representing the consensus of the members; which had been agreed upon or had been adopted by consensus following consultations; representing the agreement, etc.). Security Council members give preference to such statements, because of the complexity of the issue at stake, or as a preparation or a temporary substitute for the adoption of a resolution.

The role played by these "Presidential statements" in the Council's handling of a particular problem cannot be underestimated, and certainly should never be overlooked. So it would be useful to have these statements collected as well, and to have them classified in the same way as the resolutions they are coupled with. Statements of a merely procedural nature have in principle been omitted.²

Of course, the Security Council's involvement in matters of international peace and security has been far more extensive than is actually shown by the adoption of resolutions and statements. Indeed, situations, incidents, and disputes do not always have to lead to a request to the Security Council to consider the matter; in the majority of cases – depending upon a number of variable factors and surrounding circumstances – the States or parties concerned limit themselves to a request to have their letter circulated as Security Council document, certainly for the time being. These matters do not even reach the stage of debating their possible inclusion in the Council's agenda.

The very inclusion of a particular issue in the agenda could very well give rise to a real debate, dealing (partly) in fact with the heart of the matter itself. If, once the item has been put on the agenda, the ensuing discussion has not resulted in the adoption of a resolution, the topic is not retained. This is done in spite of the fact that the issues involved could very well turn out to be of great importance for peace and security and occupy a prominent place in history and in the current state of international relations. Only items the discussion of which resulted in the adoption of a resolution have been collected, in order to maintain this publication within reasonable and useful limits.

3 THE CLASSIFICATION OF THE MATERIAL

The main problem during the preparation of this work was not so much the collection of the material involved or even the drafting of the introductory notes (see paragraph 4). I was confronted with a number of semantic problems such as: what kind of useful headings should be used, given the purpose of this work? A topical classification of resolutions and statements seemed self-evident, but along which lines? And this in turn was a question closely linked and raised by the issue of the wording "items on the agenda of the Security Council".

In the early years, the description used when items were actually put on the agenda really revealed the core of the matter. Later on, a practice steadily evolved to simply refer, in a less clear way of course, to the date and origin of the letter which has led the Security Council to put the matter on its agenda. It is the general view that this method of dealing with the description of topics is not very helpful to those wanting to consult relevant resolutions and statements. As far as the titles of the topics are concerned, I have tried to use

In such cases it is abundantly clear that the President "also represents the council in its capapoity as an organ of the United Nations, although always under the authority of the Security Council (Rule 19)", S.D. Bailey, The Procedure of the UN Security council, 2nd edition, Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1988, at p. 99.

The same goes for the "decisions" of the Security Council listed in the aforementioned annual publications "Resolutions and Decisions fo the Security Council", because of their overwhelmingly procedural nature (e.g. a decision concerning an invitation to take part in the debate). On the term "decisions" of the Security Council, see S. Bailey, op.

formulae which indicate, if possible, the substance of the matter which is frequently commonly referred to under that heading.

Sometimes the official description of an item has been changed over the years; this is reflected in the heading of the topic. But the Security Council has not always been very consistent in using particular descriptions or in dividing an item into several sub-items. Furthermore, the question was how to deal with large and important issues, such as South Africa or the Middle East or the Former Yugoslavia. Generally, I did follow as closely as possible the official titles of the sub-items concerned, while preferring, however, to introduce some further subdivisions if they were felt to be logical, non-controversial as such and were required for the instrumental purpose of this publication. This was obvious the case, for instance, with regard to Lebanon where a subdivision was made between the general situation in the country and the UNIFIL operations. The international lawyer's need for quick and practical access to the material had been my overriding concern in this regard.

On the other hand, there was no need to depart from the distinction used in the annual publication of Resolutions and Decisions of the Security Council between questions considered by the Security Council under its responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security (Part I) and other matters considered by the Security Council (Part II).

There still remained the problem of the main division with regard to the topics included in part I; I had to bring some kind of order to the vast amount (107) of headings. A division along the lines of matters of substance or gravity would have been arbitrary and perhaps not very useful. So I opted for a gross geographical classification, based upon the distribution of UN members by region, adding a small number of more general issues, not directly linked to a particular region or one State.

4 How to use this Thematic Guide

As described in paragraph 3 the information is divided into two main parts: Part I, matters concerning the maintenance of international peace and security; and Part II, other matters considered by the Security Council. The next division is a geographical one, each geographical region being subdivided into numbered topics. The corpus of this Thematic Guide consists of an Analytical Table of Resolutions, Statements and Letters.

Each topic is built up from the same elements, in which a system of typographical indicators is applied for the sake of easy reference:

- 1 A thematic code, indicating the (abbreviated) geographical region and the number of the issue thereunder, e.g., AS. 08.
- 2 The heading.
- A running heading, which is identical to the thematic code.
- 4 A list of meetings of the Security Council when the item was (placed) on the agenda or when a debate was held on its inclusion. The meetings during which a resolution has been adopted are in bold print.
- 5 Presidential statements if any.

In order to improve the accessibility of the resolutions the following aids are provided for the user: Annex I is a chronological list of the resolutions with their number and date and thematic code. Together, the Analytical Table of Contents and Annex I provide every possible entry. Annex II gives the composition of the Security Council (1946-2000).

5 ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The publication of this Thematic Guide called for assistance of several others to whom I wish to express my thanks.

The collection of resolutions, statements, meetings, results of voting would have been impossible without the help of two of my students, Ms. Marja Peters and Ms. Edith Schoots: in different stages of the preparation they undertook the necessary but monastic job of checking and double-checking the large amount of material, joined in the final stage by their colleague Ms. Monja van de Berg.

I also wish to express my most sincere thanks to Ms. Judith Smeets, who took care of the technical preparation of this publication: her assistance, provided with patience and kindness, was invaluable to me.

On numerous occasions it was comforting to be able to rely on the kind and accurate co-operation of Mr. F.A. Steenbergen, the official in charge of the International Documentation Division at the Dutch Ministry for Foreign Affairs and his successor Mrs. A.T.M. ter Horst; I wish to express my sincere thanks to both of them.

Of course only the author is responsible for every mistake in this volume. I would therefore be grateful to all those who would be so kind as to inform me of any gaps, faults, or omissions which they may notice when using this instrument in their legal profession as a diplomat, practitioner, student or researcher, in order to improve the usefulness of this Thematic Guide.

The current guide includes references to Resolutions, Statements and Letters up to 31 December 2000.

Given the turmoil of events occuring in the region as from the summer of 1991, it was hardly suprising that the sheer peace of events and the unique complexity of the situation in the former Yugoslavia was not reflected in the description of items and sub-items discussed by the Security Council. As a result a clear-cut, useful delineation of resolutions and statements into justifiable and manageable categories has proven to be highly problematic; the Council's own inconsistency in labelling the items exacerbated the probelm. In order to keep the thematic guide as user-friendly as possible the resolutions and statements have been listed under several more general headings. A number of remaining rather smaller items which lend themselves more easily to separate listing, have been reproduced accordingly.
