

---

Third Edition

---

THE GREAT REPUBLIC

---

A History of the American People

Volume 1

---

GREAT REPUBLIC

A History of the American People

Third Edition

Volume 1

BERNARD BAILYN

Harvard University

ROBERT DALLEK

University of California, Los Angeles

DAVID BRION DAVIS

Yale University

DAVID HERBERT DONALD

Harvard University

JOHN L. THOMAS

Brown University

GORDON S. WOOD

Brown University

D. C. HEATH AND COMPANY

Lexington, Massachusetts Toronto

Cover Illustration: The Blue Boat, by Winslow Homer.
Museum of Fine Arts, Boston. Bequest of William Sturgis Bigelow.

Copyright © 1985 by D. C. Heath and Company.
Previous editions copyright © 1981 and 1977 by
D. C. Heath and Company.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopy, recording, or any information storage or retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publisher.

Published simultaneously in Canada.

Printed in the United States of America.

International Standard Book Number: 0-669-07546-9

Library of Congress Catalog Card Number: 84-81193

Acknowledgments

- Page 20. "John White Returns to Roanoke Island." Reprinted from David Freeman Hawke, ed., Richard Hakluyt's Voyages to the New World: A Selection (Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill, 1972), pp. 129–31.
- Page 41. "Francis Higginson Describes the 'Aire of New-England.'" Reprinted from Perry Miller and Thomas H. Johnson, eds., The Puritans: A Sourcebook of Their Writings (New York: Harper & Row, 1963), Vol. I, p. 124.
- Page 64. "An Act for Preventing Insurrections Among Slaves." Reprinted from The Old Dominion in the Seventeenth Century, edited by Warren M. Billings. Copyright 1975 The University of North Carolina Press. Used with permission of the publisher.
- Page 74. "John Winthrop Defines a Woman's Place." Reprinted from Perry Miller and Thomas H. Johnson, eds., The Puritans: A Sourcebook of Their Writings (New York: Harper & Row, 1963), Vol. I, p. 124.
- Page 102. "Sarah Kemble Knight Describes New York City." Reprinted from Perry Miller and Thomas H. Johnson, eds., The Puritans: A Sourcebook of Their Writings (New York: Harper & Row, 1963), Vol. 2, pp. 441–42.
- Page 128. "George Whitefield Comes to Middletown, Connecticut." Reprinted from the diary of Nathan Cole by permission of the Connecticut Historical Society.
- Page 173. "Josiah Quincy, Jr., Deplores the Stamp Act Riot." Reprinted from Proceedings of the Massachusetts Historical Society, 1st ser. 1791–1883 (20 vols., 1879–1884), Vol. 4 (1858–1860), pp. 47–51.
- Page 188. "Jonathan Sewall Condemns the Drive Toward Independence." Reprinted from the Dartmouth Papers with permission of the Earl of Dartmouth and the Staffordshire Record Office.
- Page 218. "A Pennsylvania Citizen Describes Frontier Settlement." Reprinted from Looking for America, ed. Stanley I. Kutler, 2nd. ed. (1979), Vol. 1, pp. 148–52.
- Page 223. "American Women Are Urged to Practice Republican Virtue." Reprinted from Women of the Republic by Linda K. Kerber. Copyright 1980 University of North Carolina Press. Used with permission of the publisher.
- Page 238. "A Farmer Favors the Constitution." New York Journal and Weekly Register, Nov. 8, 1787.
- Page 264. "Lewis and Clark Encounter the Plains Indians." Reprinted from History of the Expedition of Lewis and Clark, Vol. 1, ed. Elliot Coues (New York: Dover Publications Inc., 1965), pp. 160–65.
- Page 296. "Harriet Martineau Describes Enterprise in Chicago." Harriet Martineau, Society in America (London, 1837), pp. 350–52.
- Page 320. "Frances Trollope Attends an Indiana Camp Meeting." Frances Trollope, Domestic Manners of the Americans (London: Whittaker Treacher and Co., 1832), pp. 139–43.
- Page 338. "Sarah Grimké Writes on the Condition of Women in the United States." Reprinted from Roots of Bitterness: Documents of the Social History of American Women, ed. Nancy Cott (New York: E. P. Dutton, 1972). Originally found in Sarah M. Grimké, Letters on the Equality of the Sexes and the Condition of Women (Boston: Isaac Knapp, 1838), pp. 46–54.
- Page 350. "An Overseer Laments His Slaves' Flight." Reprinted from John S. Bassett's The Southern Plantation Overseer As Revealed in His Letters (Negro Universities Press, 1968), pp. 146–47.
- Page 415. "Theodore Parker on Slavery as a Barrier to Progress." Reprinted from Theodore Parker, "The Nebraska Question," Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons, Vol. 1 (Boston: Little, Brown and Co., 1855), pp. 379–80.
- Page 425. "William Henry Holcombe Argues for Secession." Reprinted from W. H. Holcombe, The Alternative: A Separate Nationality, or the Africanization of the South (New Orleans: Delta Mammoth Job Office, 1860).
- Page 437. "A Confederate Girl Writes on Secession and the War." Reprinted from James I. Robertson, Jr., ed., Sarah Morgan Dawson's A Confederate Girl's Diary (Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1960), pp. 31–33.
- Page 444. "A Union Private Describes Army Rations." Reprinted from David H. Donald, ed., Alfred Bellard's Gone for a Soldier, pp. 118–23. Copyright © 1975 by Alec Thomas Archives. Reprinted by permission of Little, Brown & Company and Julian Bach Literary Agency, Inc.

Page 481. "A Georgia Girl Deplores the Ruin of the South." Reprinted from Eliza F. Andrew's The War-Time Journal of a Georgia Girl (Appleton-Century-Crofts, 1908), pp. 32–33.

Page 494. "A Northerner Educates Virginia Freedmen." Reprinted from Gilbert Osofsky, ed., The Burden of Race: A Documentary History of Negro-White Relations in America (New York: Harper & Row, 1967), pp. 160–61.

Publisher's Foreword

In the fall of 1982, as our thoughts turned to planning for the third edition of The Great Republic, we discussed at some length how to make an excellent text and supplement package even better. Recalling how enthusiastically the first two editions were received, we resolved fully to maintain their great strengths—authoritative scholarship, interpretive approach, and comprehensive integration of the many strands of American history—in this third edition.

At the same time, we, along with the authors, felt a need for making The Great Republic more accessible to present-day undergraduates, many of whom have had little high-school preparation in history. For this reason the entire text has been redrafted and carefully edited, on a line-by-line basis. Throughout, the third edition employs a less complex vocabulary and sentence structure. At numerous points definitions and background information have been added. This edition follows a more straightforward chronological structure than did its predecessors, and three of the sections have been thoroughly reorganized. And we are proud to announce a new contributor to this edition, Professor Robert Dallek of the University of California, Los Angeles, who has recast and greatly expanded the chapters in Part 6, on the period from 1920 to the present.

In order to personalize the story told in these pages and to emphasize the strong coverage of social history, stimulating primary source documents have been added throughout the book.

Further, we have greatly expanded the supplement package. We have thoroughly revised the Student Guide and the Instructor's Guide and have increased the number of questions in the latter to more than a thousand. We have added new components to the supplement package, including thirty-five two-color map and chart transparencies and the Archive testing program, a computerized test bank for the Apple® IIe microcomputer that offers instructors a flexible means of test production with 1000+ questions.

We hope that you will agree that the new Great Republic is not only a rich and authoritative account of American history, but also a highly effective teaching tool.

Acknowledgments

We are most grateful, as are the authors of The Great Republic, to the many historians who offered their reactions to the second edition, whether through letters or through discussions with our representatives and editors on campus and at professional meetings. We especially wish to thank the following for their sensitive and perceptive comments and suggestions regarding the revision:

Michael Batinski, Southern Illinois University
Thomas Buckley, University of Tulsa
Paul Bushnell, Illinois Wesleyan University
Leonard Dinnerstein, University of Arizona
Harry Fritz, University of Montana
Gerald Gill, Tufts University
Daniel Hockman, Eastern Illinois University
David Lundberg, Tufts University
Daniel Richter, Millersville State University
Martin Saltzman, Long Island University
Robert Sterling, Eastern Illinois University
Harry Watson, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill
Roy Wortman, Kenyon College

A very special word of thanks goes to historian James Miller, whose care and dedication contributed immeasurably to the progress of this revision.

Apple® is a registered trademark of Apple Computer, Inc.

Introduction

This book is a history of the American people, from the earliest European settlements in the New World to the present. We call our book "The Great Republic," adopting a phrase that Winston Churchill used to describe the United States. No one can doubt the greatness of the American Republic if it is measured by the size of our national domain, the vastness of our economic productivity, or the stability of our governmental institutions. Less certain has been its greatness in the realm of culture, in the uses of power, and in the distribution of social justice. Our purpose has been to present a balanced story of American development—a story of great achievement, of enormous material success, and of soaring idealism, but also one of conflict, of turbulent factionalism, and of injustice, rootlessness, and grinding disorder.

Three general themes unify the six sections of this book. The first is the development of free political institutions in America. Understanding the United States today requires a knowledge of conditions in the colonial period that made popular self-government at first possible, then likely, and in the end necessary. In the American Revolution the longings of provincial Britons for a total reformation of political culture were implemented in American political institutions. During the first half of the nineteenth century, democratic institutions and practices expanded to the limits of the continent, and they received their crucial testing in the American Civil War. By the twentieth century, urbanization and industrialization profoundly changed American society, but our democracy survived all of these changes, as well as depressions, international crises, and world wars. To understand why today, in the ninth decade of the twentieth century, no significant groups of Americans question our free institutions requires an understanding of how these institutions evolved from eighteenth-century republicanism to modern mass democracy.

Our second theme is the tension that has always existed in America between the interests of groups with special goals and needs and those of the society as a whole. From the beginning the New World, with its abundant resources, stimulated ambitions among the shrewd, the enterprising, and the energetic that often conflicted with the shared needs of the entire populace. The enormous expanse of the country and the admixture of peoples from every quarter of the world encouraged social fragmentation and fostered cultural diversity. But from colonial times to the present, there have been countervailing forces working for social stability and cultural homogeneity.

The Founding Fathers of the Republic were aware that there would be no automatic harmonizing of regional, economic, and social interests, and they worried that minorities might become subject to the tyranny of majorities. At the same time, they feared a centralized government powerful enough to impose order on these conflicting and local interests and active enough to defend the weak against the powerful. In the national and state constitutions they devised a mechanism for the mediation of struggles and for the protection of human rights. In the years since, the balance between the general welfare and the welfare of regions, states, and economic and social groups has often been precarious, and our book shows how, from time to time, that balance has tipped, sometimes in the direction of social order and stability, sometimes in favor of minority interests and individual rights. Much of our story deals with successive attempts, never fully satisfactory, to reconcile the needs of the whole country with the interests of the parts.

Our third theme reflects our recognition that the history of the United States has always been part of a larger history. Except for the native Americans, who had developed a complex and diverse indigenous civilization, the early settlers in America were all immigrants who brought with them the beliefs, values, and cultural legacy of the European and African societies in which they had been born. Naturally, then, developments in America have been closely and inextrically related to those abroad. We believe that the American Revolution, for all of its distinctiveness, needs to be viewed as one in a series of great democratic revolutions that swept the Western world. We think the leveling of social distinctions and the democratization of political life in Jacksonian America are closely related to similar contemporary movements in Europe. And we have stressed that the urbanization, mechanization, and bureaucratization of the United States by the end of the nineteenth century paralleled, copied, and influenced like transformations in the other modernizing nations.

By the twentieth century the connections between developments in the United States and those in the world at large became even closer, and the final sections of our book trace the emergence of the United States as a world power. We have told the story of our involvement in two devastating world wars, in addition to other, smaller conflicts all over the globe, from Korea to Vietnam to Lebanon. We have shown how, in recent decades, the president of the United States has become the most influential political leader in the world, how variations in the American economy have affected the well-being of all other nations, and how, for better or worse, American popular culture has reached a global audience. At the same time, we have emphasized that changes in other parts of the world have profoundly affected American political life, economic growth, and social organization. In short, we have written an American history that is part of world history.

In presenting these three themes, the authors have started from a shared view of the nature of history. We all believe that history is a mode of understanding, not merely a collection of information about the past. Our obligation is not simply to describe what happened, but to explain it, to make clear why things developed as they did. We share, too, an aversion to any deterministic interpretation of history. At certain times economic and demographic forces are dominant, but they are themselves shaped by cultural forces. Great political events are sometimes triggered by economic drives, but at other times they are responses to ideologies.

We do not believe, then, that the course of American history was predetermined. The present condition of our national life has to be explained historically, stage by stage. In the pages that follow, we present both a narrative and an analysis of how the United States has come to be what it is today—a great power, but still a Great Republic, where freedom and equality are dreams that can become realities.

B. B.	D. H. D.
R. D.	J. L. T.
D. B. D.	G. S. W.

Contents

PART ONE

Shaping the Republic, to 1760

Bernard Bailyn

Introduction 2

1

CHAPTER

The Background of English Colonization 6

Points of Contrast: Spain in America	6	Financial Limitations and the “Starving Times”	22
England’s Overseas Expansion	14	Chronology	26
Personnel and the Role of the State	18	Suggested Readings	26
John White Returns to Roanoke Island	20

2

CHAPTER

Transplantation 28

Virginia: Squalor, Struggle, and a New Way of Life	30	The Failure of the Dutch	47
The Pilgrims’ “Sweet Communion”	36	Royal Rewards: Carolina and the Jerseys	50
The Puritans: Power in the Service of God	39	Pennsylvania: A Godly Experiment and a Worldly Success	55
Francis Higginson Describes the “Aire of New-England”	41	Chronology	58
A Catholic Refuge on the Chesapeake	44	Suggested Readings	58

3

CHAPTER

Europe in the Wilderness: American Society in the Seventeenth Century

60

Population Growth and Structure	60	Social Instability	70
An Act for Preventing Insurrections Among Slaves	64	John Winthrop Defines a Woman's Place	74
Economic Instability	65	Religion	75
		Suggested Readings	82

4

CHAPTER

Elements of Change, 1660–1720

84

Empire	84	Sarah Kemble Knight Describes New York City	102
Anglo-American Aristocracy	91	Chronology	108
Rebellion: The Measure of Social Strain	97	Suggested Readings	109
Provincial Culture	101

5

CHAPTER

American Society in the Eighteenth Century

110

The New Population: Sources and Impact	110	The Origins of American Politics	127
A Maturing Economy and a Society in Flux	116	George Whitefield Comes to Middletown, Connecticut	128
Religion: The Sources of American Denominationalism	123	Suggested Readings	134

6

CHAPTER

The Enlightenment's New World 136

---

"Rule Britannia"	136	Chronology	153
The Alienation of the State	143	Suggested Readings	153
The American and the Enlightenment	147

Color Essay: Embellishing the Wilderness
Between 106 and 107

PART TWO

Framing the Republic, 1760–1820

Gordon S. Wood

Introduction	156
---------------------	-----

7

CHAPTER

Sources of the Revolution 158

---

The Changing Empire	158	The Imperial Debate	179
The Reorganization of the Empire	167	Chronology	182
American Resistance	171	Suggested Readings	182
Josiah Quincy, Jr., Deplores the Stamp Act Riot	173

CHAPTER 8
Independence and War			184
The Coming of Independence	184	An Asylum for Liberty	190
The Declaration of Independence	187	The War for Independence	193
Jonathan Sewall Condemns the Drive Toward Independence	188	Chronology	202
		Suggested Readings	203

CHAPTER 9
Republicanism			204
Republican Idealism	204	The Betterment of Humanity	220
State Constitution Making	207	American Women Are Urged to Practice Republican Virtue	223
The Articles of Confederation	209	Suggested Readings	225
Republican Society	212
A Pennsylvania Citizen Describes Frontier Settlement	218

CHAPTER 10
The Federalist Age			226
The Critical Period	226	The Republican Opposition	245
The Federal Constitution	233	Chronology	252
A Farmer Favors the Constitution	238	Suggested Readings	252
The Hamiltonian Program	239

CHAPTER	11
The Jeffersonian Revolution			254
The Revolution of 1800	254	Republican Religion	270
An Empire of Liberty	261	Republican Diplomacy	273
Lewis and Clark Encounter the Plains		The War of 1812	276
Indians	264	Chronology	279
The Origins of Judicial Review	267	Suggested Readings	280

Color Essay: The Rising Glory of America
Between 234 and 235

PART THREE

Expanding the Republic, 1820–1860

David Brion Davis

Introduction	284
---------------------	-----

CHAPTER	12
Population Growth and Economic Expansion			288
Population Growth, Immigration, and Urbanization	288	Industrialization and Railroads	298
Agriculture	292	Population Distribution and Opportunity	301
Harriet Martineau Describes Enterprise in     Chicago	296	The Cost of Expansion: The Indians	305
		Suggested Readings	310

CHAPTER	13
Shaping the American Character: Reform, Protest, Dissent, Artistic Creativity			312
"We Must Educate or Perish"	314	The Benevolent Empire	331
The Evangelical Age	317	Feminism and Perfectionism	335
Frances Trollope Attends an Indiana Camp Meeting	320	The Tensions of Democratic Art	337
The Cult of Self-Improvement	323	Sarah Grimké on the Condition of Women in the United States	338
Dissent: The Mormons as a Test Case	326	Suggested Readings	341

CHAPTER	14
"The Peculiar Institution"			344
Rise of the Cotton Kingdom	344	Radical Abolitionism	355
An Overseer Laments His Slaves' Flight	350	Suggested Readings	362
The South as a "Slave Society"	353

CHAPTER	15
Politics: Cohesion and Division, 1820–1840			364
"A Fire Bell in the Night": The Missouri Compromise	366	The Bank War, the Panic of 1837, and Political Realignments	376
The End of Republican Unity	369	Whigs and the Two-Party System	379
Jackson's Rise to Power	371	Chronology	384
The Threat of National Division: Tariffs, Nullification, and the Gag Rule	374	Suggested Readings	385

CHAPTER 16
Expansion and New Boundaries			386
Foreign Dangers, American Expansion, and the Monroe Doctrine	386	Chronology	402
The Mexican War and Manifest Destiny	396	Suggested Readings	403

CHAPTER 17
Compromise and Conflict			404
Free Soil and the Challenge of California	406	Dred Scott and the Lincoln-Douglas Debates	417
The Crisis of 1850	408	The Ultimate Failure of Compromise	421
The Know-Nothing Upsurge and the Collapse of the Whigs	411	William Henry Holcombe Argues for Secession	425
The Confrontation over Kansas	413	Chronology	426
Theodore Parker on Slavery as a Barrier to Progress	415	Suggested Readings	427

Color Essay: The Perils of Civilization
Between 394 and 395

PART FOUR

Uniting the Republic, 1860–1877

David Herbert Donald

Introduction	430
---------------------	-----

CHAPTER 18
Stalemate, 1861–1862			432
The Rival Governments	432	Financing the War	446
Winning the Border States	436	Wartime Diplomacy	448
A Confederate Girl Writes on Secession and the War	437	Battles and Leaders	451
Raising the Armies	441	Chronology	456
A Union Private Describes Army Rations	444	Suggested Readings	456

CHAPTER 19
Experimentation, 1862–1865			458
Evolution of a Command System	458	Wartime Politics in the Confederacy	475
The Naval War	463	Wartime Politics in the North	476
The Wartime Economy	465	Northern Victory	478
Inflation and Its Consequences	466	A Georgia Girl Deplores the Ruin of the South	481
Conscription and Conflict	468	Chronology	484
Steps Toward Emancipation	470	Suggested Readings	484
Europe and the War	475

CHAPTER 20
Reconstruction, 1865–1877			486
Paths Not Taken	488	Racism as a Limit to Change	503
Constitutionalism as a Limit to Change	490	The Restoration of “Home Rule”	509
A Northerner Educates Virginia Freedmen	494	Chronology	514
Laissez-Faire as a Limit to Change	495	Suggested Readings	514
Political Parties as a Limit to Change	498

Color Essay: From Eden to Babylon
Between 490 and 491

APPENDIX	i
Map of the United States of America	ii-iii	Presidential Elections	xxi
Declaration of Independence	v	Presidents and Vice-Presidents	xxv
Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union	vii	Growth of U.S. Population and Area	xxvii
Constitution of the United States of America	xi
INDEX	xxix		