石庫門

THE SHIKUMEN
ARCHITECTURE
OF SHANGHAI

上海“石库门”其实就是“石箍门”之误由来的，这一名称形象地说明了石库门建筑最显著的特征。石库门建筑是一种吸引了古今中外多方面的基因，汇聚了建筑设计的多种智慧，由上海人自己创造的一种非常实用的建筑形态，它是一种地道的海派建筑。

老式石库门的建筑，在天井的两边，通常有上下厢房，是供主人的子女和亲属居住的。是石库门中的天井，把整个的建筑贯通成一气的。

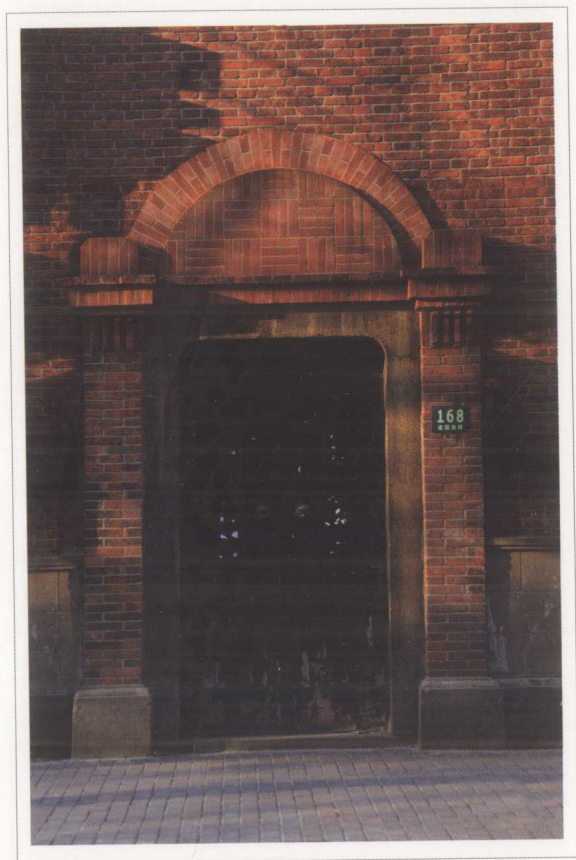

据历史记载，在二、三十年代，上海的石库门建筑达到了鼎盛时期，在庞大的石库门建筑群中，又随着建成年代的不同，分为多种形式，透过其外形，人们依然可以依稀地感觉到上海石库门建筑的多姿多彩。

The Shikumen (literally meaning “stone-framed gate”) is a characteristic architectural style of Shanghai. A Shikumen house has a black-painted stone-framed gate with a decorated pediment, hence the name. Beyond the gate is a small courtyard, and in the main space facing south are the living room on the ground floor and the main bedroom for the owner on the second floor. On the left and right wings are side rooms and in the back is a kitchen. The Shikumen features a wonderful combination of the Western architecture with the traditional Chinese influences.

The Shikumen appeared in the late 19th century as the local realty developers built blocks of townhouses for the dramatic inflow of population. The heyday of the Shikumen arrived in the 1920s and 1930s, and entire blocks of Shikumen houses built in that period have survived till today in relatively good repair. There are a lot of variations in the Shikumen's structures and decorations.
