A Surprise Girl

第1章 令人意外的女孩

Matthew Cuthbert arrived at the train station.
But the place was quiet and there was no sign of any train.

"Am I too early?" he said to himself.

Then the stationmaster came to him and said,

"The train has just left, Mr. Cuthbert.

And a little girl is waiting for you."

"I came here for a boy, not a girl,"

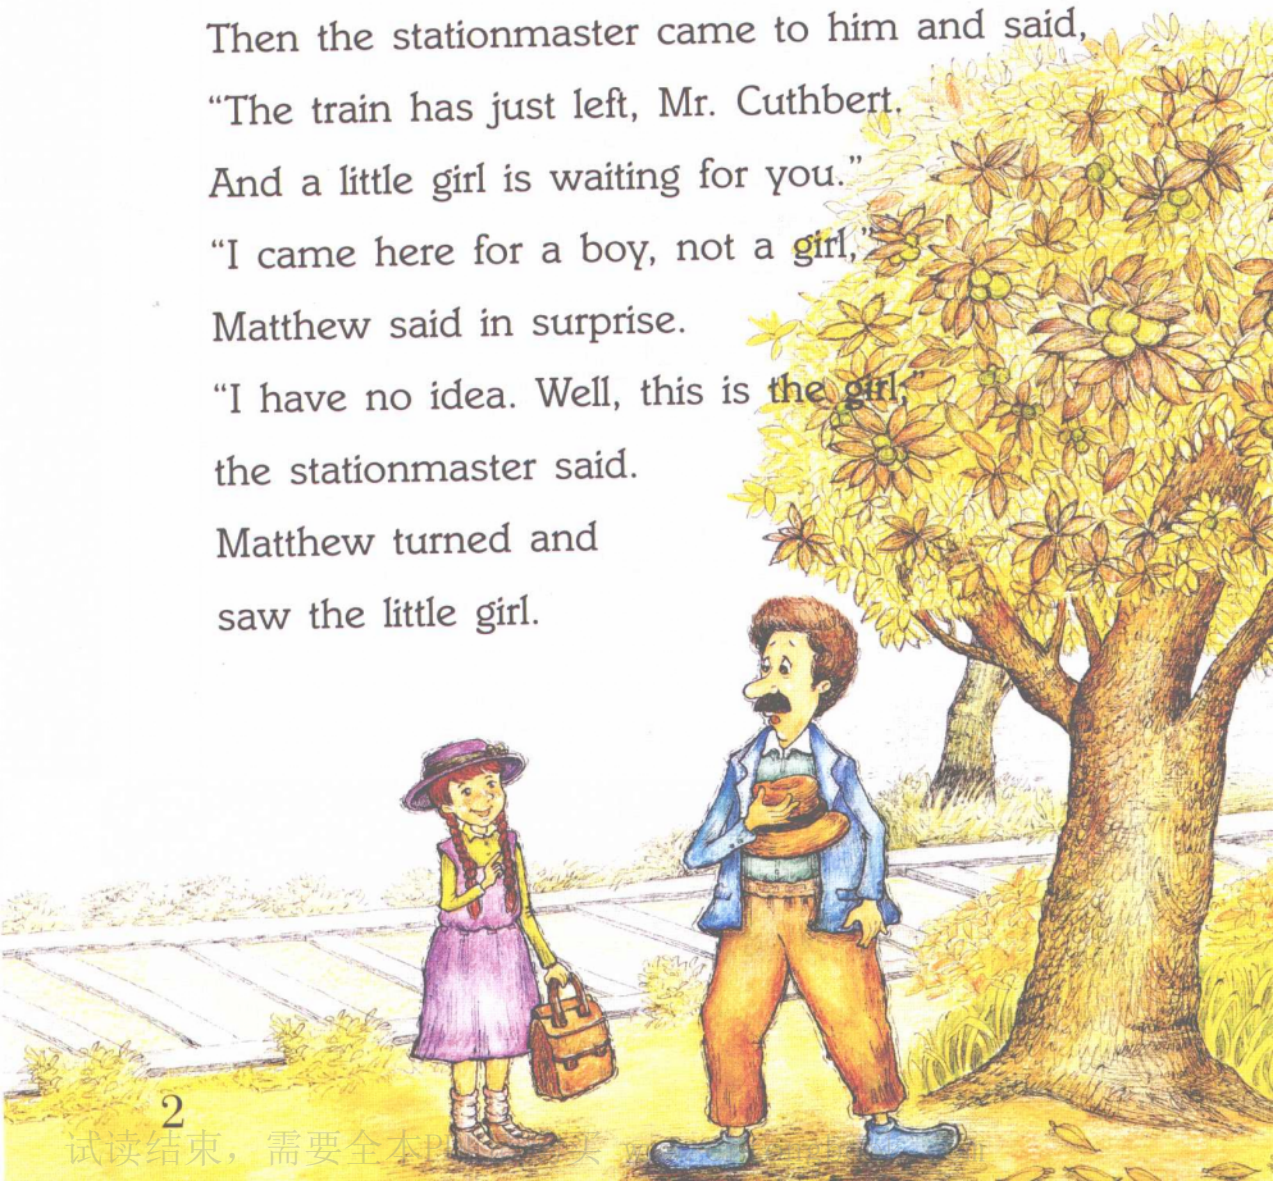

Matthew said in surprise.

"I have no idea. Well, this is the girl,"

the stationmaster said.

Matthew turned and saw the little girl.

Matthew met a boy at the train station.

The girl was about eleven with a small, freckled face. Her hair was red in long plaits.

"Are you Mr. Cuthbert of Green Gables?"

"I'm very happy to live with you," she said excitedly.

Matthew, a shy and quiet man, didn't know what to say.

How could he tell her he didn't want her?

What would his sister, Marilla say?

"Uh... Well, let's go home anyway," he said.

He took the girl to his cart and drove home.

"When I was a baby, my parents died.

I've had to work hard, but I've always been poor.

But I like to imagine beautiful things. It makes me happy."

The little girl talked and talked. Matthew just smiled at her.

Marilla was waiting for them at the door.

Anne came up to Marilla with a smile, but Marilla cried, "Matthew, who is she? Where's the boy?"

"They sent a girl, not a boy," he said unhappily.

Suddenly the girl began to cry.

"You don't want me because I'm not a boy!

Nobody ever wanted me," the girl sobbed.

"Oh, don't cry. You can stay here, but just for tonight. What's your name?" asked Marilla.

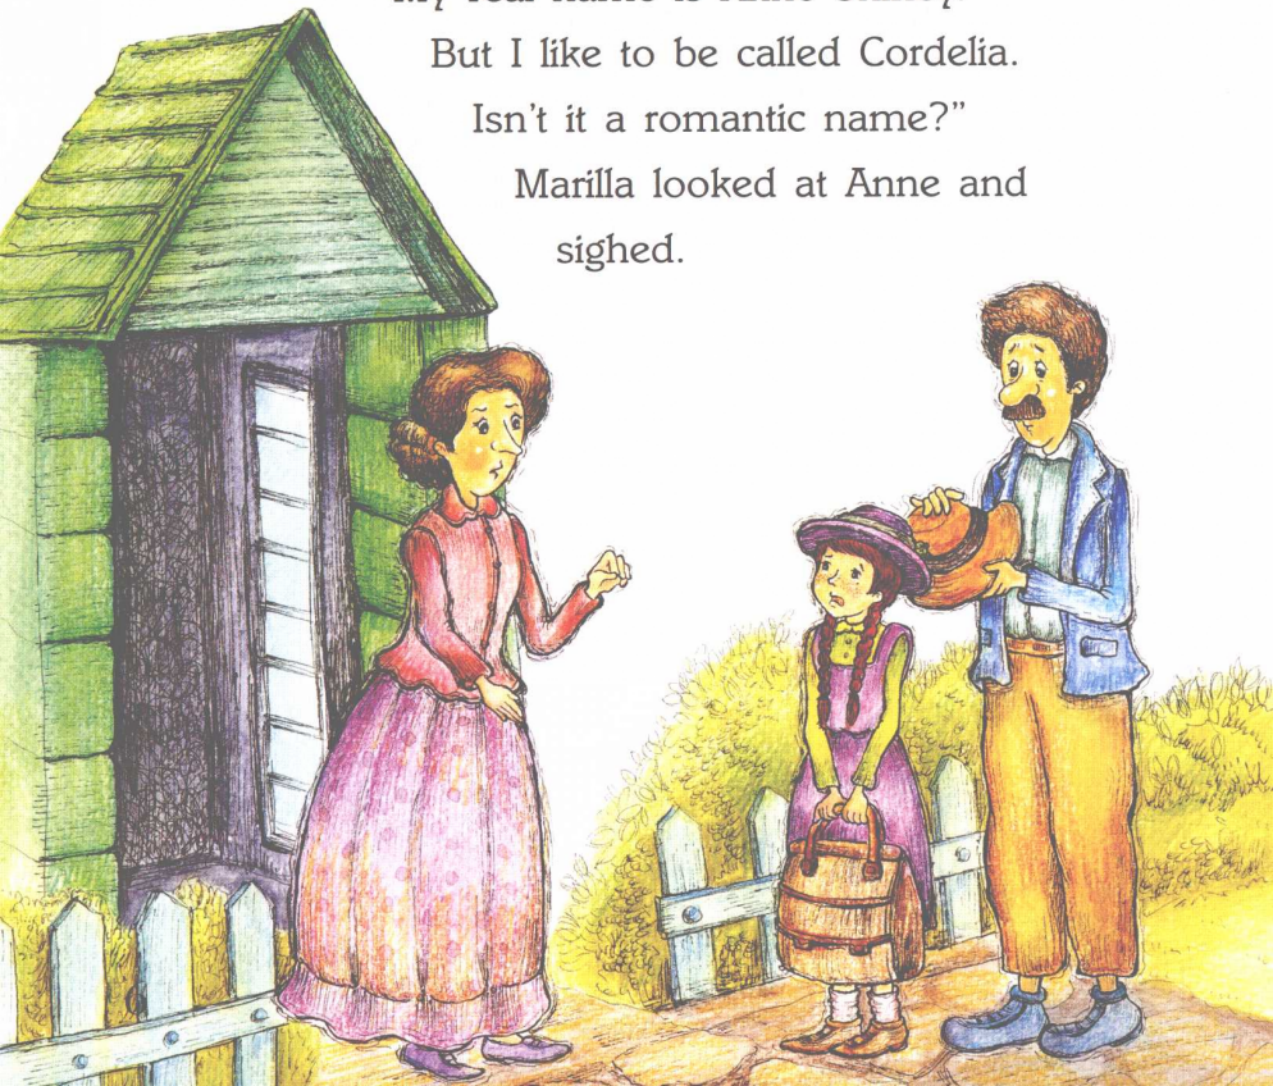

The girl stopped crying and said,

"My real name is Anne Shirley.

But I like to be called Cordelia.

Isn't it a romantic name?"

Marilla looked at Anne and sighed.

When Anne went to bed, Marilla said to her brother, "We need a boy. The boy can help you with your work.

We must send her back tomorrow."

"Marilla, she is nice," said Matthew.

"So do you want to keep her?" asked Marilla sharply.

"Well, we can do some good for her.

She has been very unhappy up to now," said Matthew.

"But we don't need a girl!" said Marilla.

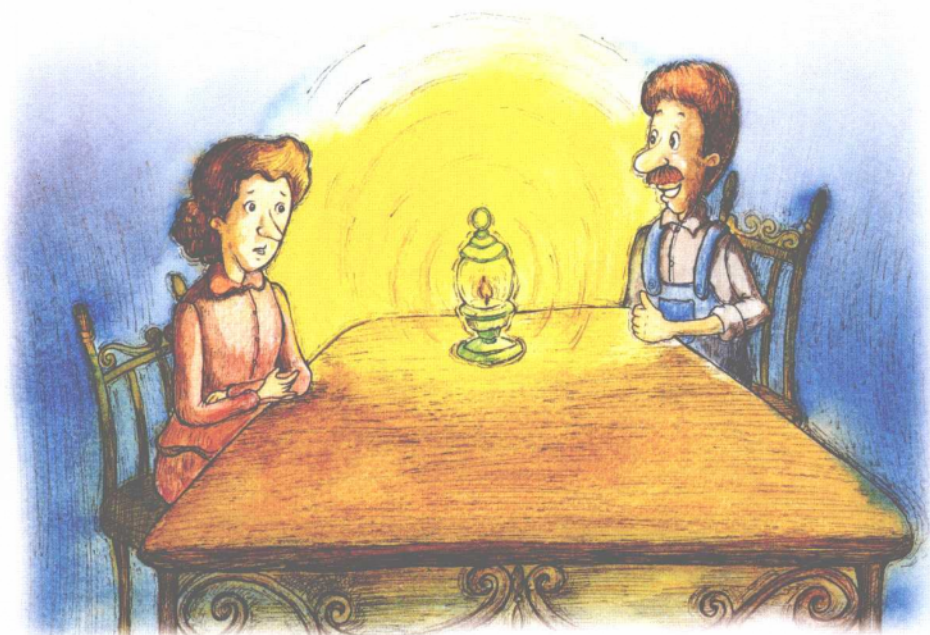

"You're right, but perhaps she needs us.

And she can help you with the housework.

I can get a boy from the village," he said.

Marilla thought for a while and said, "Okay, she can stay."

Matthew smiled and said, "We should be kind to her. I think she needs a lot of love."

Finally, Marilla decided to send Anne back.

The next morning Anne sat up in bed.
A flood of sunshine poured into the room.
She slowly looked around the room.
“Where am I now? Oh, I’m at Green Gables!
This is a beautiful place. I really want to live here,” she sadly said to herself.
At the breakfast table, Marilla said to Anne,
“Matthew and I have decided to keep you.
But you should promise to be a good girl.”
Suddenly, Anne started to cry.
“Well, what’s the matter?” asked Marilla.
“Thank you very much! I’ll try to be nice and kind,” sobbed Anne.

Life at Green Gables

第2章 绿山墙的生活

"Our neighbor, Mrs. Barry has a daughter your age. Her name is Diana," Marilla said to Anne.

"Diana! It's a pretty name! Is she as pretty as her name? What color is her hair? I hope she doesn't have red hair," Anne said excitedly.

"She has dark hair and she's a very nice girl," said Marilla.

Soon Anne met Diana, and they became good friends. They had a great time together in the forest or by the river.

"Diana, I love everything at Green Gables!" exclaimed Anne.
