Foreword

Dr. Patrick Leung
L.H.D, Lincoln University
梁景华博士

Enthusiasm, creativity, hard work and a pro-active attitude are the qualities that have driven my 30-year career. Innovation has always been my goal and in creating stimulating and extraordinary interiors for every project.

I established PAL Design Consultants Limited in Hong Kong China 17 years ago and, over the years, I have been fortunate enough to inject inspiration into the many interesting projects the firm has worked on.

The conscientious staffs at PAL have always worked hard to realize my creative drive and I offer my heartfelt thanks for their contributions. They have played a special part in developing a team spirit that has produced a series of distinguished and memorable designs.

Certain disciplines must be adhered to when providing interior design solutions for international hotel groups. Standards must be high, particularly in the five-star sector, and the management always expects nothing but the best. From the overall design to the handling of the details, everything must be consistent with the brands' image and the requirements of the individual hotel management while at the same time, aesthetic, stylish and practical.

The hospitality industry in Asia has experienced dramatic growth in recent years and PAL has received a number of prestigious and challenging commissions in connection with this expansion. This body of work is divided into Hotel, Restaurant and Spa for presentation in this book.

Hotels are 21st-century cultural icons. They represent a class of luxury and hospitality within a place and offer a level of design and service unavailable outside exclusive private members clubs. They are a place to be seen, to entertain, and to impress guests.

In the old days, hotels were a simple, fundamental concept of accommodation. Now there is a lot more to it.

The functions a hotel now performs are diverse. They provide venues for socialising, banqueting, entertaining, physical exercise, and spiritual enlightenment.

Some things have changed fundamentally; 20 years ago every hotel had a gym, used mostly by men, but now all have a spa, used mostly by women.

It's not just travellers who enjoy what modern hotels have to offer. Local people also use them for entertaining prestigious and better appointed than the office or the home.

This multiplicity of function makes designing modern hotels a complex exercise for the hotel owner, architect and the interior designer. All three are concerned with creating an outstanding and memorable experience, one that will bring customers back.

Hospitality is business driven by competition. Operators and investors require success to achieve a return measured in sales. Attention to detail and careful consideration are essential to success.

Design must be original and able to inspire a sense of well-being and satisfaction.

This book highlights Patrick Leung's award-winning interior designs for different styles of contemporary hotel as founder and principal designer of PAL Design Consultants Limited. It will focus on outstanding F&B outlets, and will look at groundbreaking work in spa design.

GREET

The entrance lobby of a great hotel is a rendezvous alive with social interaction and commerce. High society greet and gather within the lobby and simply being present increases the chances of success in life. The design must reflect and amplify this air of infinite possibility and advantage. The lobby should be visually impressive but should also entice users towards the interior, pulling them towards solid pleasures hinted at around the entrance. Hoteliers want to make their lobby an important landmark.

The background image shows a sophisticated hotel interior. In the foreground, there are several light-colored, modern armchairs arranged in a semi-circle. The floor is dark and reflective. In the background, there are more chairs and a large, curved architectural element, possibly a staircase or a wall, with warm lighting. The overall atmosphere is elegant and modern.

SOCIAL

Ballrooms, business conferences, private dining and meetings are crucial to the operation of the modern hotel. The space devoted towards these socially interactive functions on the architectural plan is therefore significant. Modern life is conducted within society and connections made at grand social and business events form lifelong alliances and friendships. Ballrooms are of particular importance. Banqueting offers big revenue returns and traditional weddings in Asia involve large numbers of people. Hotels devote considerable resources towards making these occasions a success.
