PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

Over seven years have now passed since the first edition of this book and many changes have taken place in the Basic Law, the Civil Code and Criminal Code. These have, where relevant, been incorporated into this edition. I would also have liked to replace the cases with more modern ones, but this proved too ambitious for the time available, so I have had to content myself with including a few new ones at the expense of the old. The new ones are not all modern, but some reflect such topical subjects as mass slaughter of animals, the use of drugs, the legacy of East Germany, and computers and the internet. Also, instead of serving up the standard diet of cases from the Federal Constitutional Court and the Bundesgerichtshof, I have included two cases from the Federal Administrative Court and one from an Oberlandesgericht. The cases which appear for the first time in this edition are referred to as: the cattle slaughter case; the cannabis application rejection case; the right to give the opposite view cases; the land purchase mistake case; the computer non-disclosure case; the shooting at the disco case; the internet auction case; the kite case; and the referendum mistake case.

The European Union also has a higher profile; one of the new cases is partly based on EU law, and some of the amendments to the Civil Code are in pursuance of EU Directives. Perhaps all the amendments to the Civil Code look on to a day when parts of private law will be codified at a European level and the most modern parts of the national codes will exert the most influence on the ultimate wording of such a document.

Material on German law has become more freely available and some book sources are mentioned in a further reading list at the end of the book. Articles on German law can be identified through the database Legaltrac, so I have only made a passing reference to some articles where I have attempted to explore a theme more deeply. Websites are an increasingly useful source, and a substantial number of translations of German cases now appear on the website of the Institute of Global Law, University College, London: www.ucl.ac.uk/laws/global_law. Other sources worth mentioning (some in English and some in German) include in particular: www.jura.uni-sb.de; www.kanzlei.de; www.iecl.iuscomp.org/gla; <http://dejure.org>.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

'Positive law lives in the general consciousness of a people and hence we have to call it people's law.'

von Savigny

My initial idea in writing this book was to produce a selection of original German legal material together with some commentary on it, one particular source of inspiration being the Sourcebook on French Law by Rudden. There were a number of reasons why this was not achievable, the most important of which were:

- 1 I thought it was desirable to include material which gave an introduction to five basic areas of law: the constitution, human rights, contract, tort and crime.
- 2 In view of the fact that the French language is much more widely known than German, a full translation of the material seemed necessary.
- 3 German case decisions are usually much longer than French ones.
- 4 In view of the pressure on space created by these factors, extracts from academic writings could not realistically be included, and commentary had to be brief and selective.

Like any book containing cases and materials, coverage of the law has to be patchy and incomplete, even in areas included in some detail. The purpose of the book, however, is to facilitate study of some specific areas in greater depth than a textbook would permit, perhaps with the aid of other sources, either German or, where available, English (such as the incomparably wider and deeper treatment of tort in the German Law of Torts: A Comparative Introduction by Markesinis (3rd edn, Oxford: Clarendon); inevitably, there is some duplication of tort cases between that book and this one).

I have also had in mind the needs of students who are intending to study German law in Germany under programmes such ERASMUS and SOCRATES, and who ought to be familiar with the language as well as the content of German law before they start.

Some cases represent significant legal developments and others are just illustrations. Apart from their substantive law content, some present images of post-war Germany: the aftermath of the Third Reich (the film director case; the publication of a letter case); features of post-war West Germany such as the economic miracle (the investment aid act case) and student unrest (the newspaper delivery obstruction case); the pathway to reunification (the all Germany election case) and its consequences (the shootings at the Berlin wall case; the East German politicians trial publicity cases); and Germany's place in the new world order (the Bosnia flight exclusion zone case). Some cases present interesting comparisons in different kinds of legal reasoning: contrast the moral argument in the base motive case with the historical and sociological content of the housework day case; the analysis of old case law in the rough ill-treatment case with the analysis of statutory purpose in the arrested admiral case; the bold academic theorising in the Hamburg parking case and the conceptual arguments in the neglected assistance case with the application of the provisions of the Code in the cases concerning declarations of will. Cases like the film director case, and the shootings at the Berlin wall case are jurisprudential studies in themselves.

I owe a great debt to a number of people without whom this book would not have been possible, in particular: my brother-in-law and sister-in-law Wolf and Geraldine Paul, who (respectively) helped me with some difficult pieces of German and some particularly intractable software problems; and typed some parts of the manuscript; my wife Daphne, and my children David, Geoffrey, Rosemary and Emma who put up with a lot while the book was being written and still (in the case of the first three) gave some help with the typing; my parents-in-law, Mr and Mrs Barber, who prepared the index; Jürgen Meinz of the Beamtenfachhochschule at Hof who gave some helpful advice about contents; Cavendish who went to great pains introducing order into an initially chaotic manuscript in a short space of time; Professor Cooper, my Head of Division, who provided support and assistance while the book was being written; Sara Navas, who typed a large part of the manuscript. The responsibility for any errors remains solely mine.

I would also like to thank JCB Mohr (Paul Siebeck) (in respect of the decisions of the Bundesverfassungsgericht) Verlag CH Beck (in respect of the cases contained in the Neue Juristische Wochenschrift) and Carl Heymanns Verlag KG (in respect of of the decisions of the Bundesgerichtshof) for their kind permission for the reproduction of cases in this book.
