ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

As a book approaches publication, the writer feels a combination of emotions, a mixture of relief and regret that the work of writing is at an end, together with gratitude towards those others who have in their different ways made it possible, and whose influence has shaped the work in its final form.

This book was begun while I was working at De Montfort University, Leicester, and completed at the University of Wales, Swansea. I owe a debt of gratitude to colleagues and former colleagues at both institutions, in particular Professor David Hughes, who has in a sense been the godfather of this book. I have also benefited enormously from the wise counsel of Professor Sir James Holt of Fitzwilliam College, Cambridge, who had no idea what he was letting himself in for when he raised the subject of King John over lunch at the British Legal History Association Conference in July 1999.

A book such as this also reflects what is quite literally a lifetime's fascination for history, and there are many whose influence has been indirect but nonetheless vital, including my parents, who first nurtured my interest, teachers and university tutors.

Turning to those directly involved in bringing the book to a publishable state, I must thank in particular Jon Lloyd, my editor at Cavendish Publishing, and Frederick Hogarth, who produced the map and genealogical tables and whose website is an Aladdin's cave for anyone remotely interested in heraldry and related matters (www.baronage.co.uk).

Finally, any text on the history of the British constitution must be to a considerable extent a history of the British monarchy, central as the monarchy is to our constitutional system. This book reached its final form during the Golden Jubilee year of the present Queen and is published as the 50th anniversary approaches of her coronation in 1953. I can therefore do no better than to dedicate it, by gracious permission, to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II.
