

2025A006

Diversity in Early Care and Education

Honoring Differences

Fourth Edition

Janet Gonzalez-Mena

Diversity in Early Care and Education

HONORING DIFFERENCES

---

Fourth Edition

Janet Gonzalez-Mena

Napa Valley College

Boston Burr Ridge, IL Dubuque, IA Madison, WI New York
San Francisco St. Louis Bangkok Bogotá Caracas Kuala Lumpur
Lisbon London Madrid Mexico City Milan Montreal New Delhi
Santiago Seoul Singapore Sydney Taipei Toronto

Higher Education

DIVERSITY IN EARLY CARE AND EDUCATION HONORING DIFFERENCES

Published by McGraw-Hill, a business unit of The McGraw-Hill Companies, Inc., 1221 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY, 10020. Copyright © 2005, 2001, 1997, 1993, by The McGraw-Hill Companies, Inc. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced or distributed in any form or by any means, or stored in a database or retrieval system, without the prior written consent of The McGraw-Hill Companies, Inc., including, but not limited to, in any network or other electronic storage or transmission, or broadcast for distance learning.

Some ancillaries, including electronic and print components, may not be available to customers outside the United States.

This book is printed on acid-free paper.

2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 0 DOC/DOC 0 9 8 7 6 5

ISBN 0 07 287783 9

Publisher: Emily Barosse

Executive sponsoring editor: David S. Patterson

Senior developmental editor: Cara Harvey

Executive marketing manager: Pamela S. Cooper

Media producer: Shannon Gattens

Project manager: Ruth Smith

Production supervisor: Janean A. Utley

Associate designer: Srdjan Savanovic

Media project manager: Meghan Durko

Photo research coordinator: Alexandra Ambrose

Photo researcher: Judy Mason

Cover design: Srdjan Savanovic

Cover image: ©2005 Masterfile

Typeface: 10.5/12.5 Janson Text

Compositor: GAC Indianapolis

Printer: R. R. Donnelley and Sons Inc.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Gonzalez-Mena, Janet.

Diversity in early education programs: honoring differences / Janet Gonzalez-Mena—4th ed.

p. cm.

Rev. ed. of: Multicultural issues in child care. 3rd ed. c2001.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 0-07-287783-9 (pbk. : alk. paper)

1. Child care—United States. 2. Early childhood education—United States. 3.
Multiculturalism—United States. 4. Multicultural education—United States. I.
Gonzalez-Mena, Janet. Multicultural issues in child care. II. Title.

HQ778.63.G66 2005

362.71'2'0973—dc22

2004048293

To my husband, Frank Gonzalez-Mena

What sets worlds in motion is the interplay of differences, their attractions and repulsions. Life is plurality, death is uniformity. By suppressing differences and peculiarities, by eliminating different civilizations and cultures, progress weakens life and favors death. The ideal of a single civilization for everyone, implicit in the cult of progress and technique, impoverishes and mutilates us. Every view of the world that becomes extinct, every culture that disappears, diminishes a possibility of life.

—Octavio Paz

Preface

This book is about honoring and respecting diversity. It's not about adding chopsticks and kimonos to the dramatic play area or serving tortillas sometimes instead of bread. Certainly those are valid ways of recognizing diversity, as are carefully considering what to hang on the wall and selecting what kinds of books to make available for the children. Selecting materials and other physical objects is the easiest part of honoring and respecting diversity. It's also fairly easy to expose the children to the contributions of people from groups that traditionally have been underrepresented as contributors to society. Adding units or themes that relate to diversity is another way to address diversity and expand the regular curriculum. All these approaches represent forward movement, but this book goes far beyond those preliminary steps.

This book addresses teaching children about diversity, equity, and social justice and integrating these topics into the regular curriculum so they are not just add-ons. To do that we have to start with ourselves, and focus on the roles that adults play in children's lives. We can't just focus on antibias lessons for the children. Children are watching us every minute; they pick up on our behaviors and attitudes and see with whom we develop relationships. It's easy to conduct a circle time on being fair, but the message won't get through unless adults model what they teach. Teaching children to take social action in the name of equity is one thing, but doing it ourselves is another. So the goal isn't just to get along better, but to work together for equitable decision-making when it counts. We have to approach crucial conversations on a level playing field and quit trying to put ourselves in a superior position. We have to learn to honor perspectives, attitudes, and beliefs that are different from our own. That may be easier when we work with people we feel comfortable with, but what about the people who make us uncomfortable? Maybe their ideas don't fit ours, maybe their values aren't the same as ours. It is in these situations that, through relationship building, we can experience amazing transformations. Therein lies the challenge and the benefits of diversity work. It can be hard, but it's always enriching. The rewards are worth the challenges!

One of the goals of diversity work in early childhood settings is to eliminate harmful mismatches between the family and the program through professional sensitivity and responsiveness. When we examine what we do, we may seem to be operating out of universal child development principles, but the truth is that those principles occur in a cultural context. You can't remove from a cultural framework the ways you relate to children, teach them, care for them, determine program curricula, handle daily routines, or view the landmarks of development. Children learn from their parents and teachers how to behave in culturally distinct ways. Consciously or not, we try to make the children we work with into the kinds of people who fit our culture. It is vital that we become aware that we are doing this, and developing that awareness is one of the goals of this book. Without that awareness, families and teachers may be working at cross purposes.

An article about guidelines for enacting such change in the American Psychological Association's American Psychologist (2003) starts, "All individuals exist in social, political, historical, and economic contexts and psychologists are increasingly called upon to understand the influences of these contexts on individuals' behavior."<sup>1</sup> That is what this book is about.

This book, formerly named Multicultural Issues in Child Care, serves well as a companion to Foundations of Early Childhood Education: Teaching Children in a Diverse Society, 3/e by Gonzalez-Mena (McGraw-Hill, 2005); and Infants, Toddlers, and Caregivers 6/e by Gonzalez-Mena and Eyer (McGraw-Hill, 2004). It also fits well as supplementary reading to any child development text because it covers the cultural aspects of development.

This book may also be viewed as a companion to Louise Derman-Sparks's Antibias Curriculum (NAEYC, 1989), complementing it nicely. Diversity in Early Care and Education picks up where Derman-Sparks stopped. Her focus is on an antibias approach to preschool curriculum; the focus in this book is on an antibias approach to cultural information, adult relations, and conflicts in goals, values, expectations, and child-rearing practices.

This book can be used by anyone involved in teacher training or early childhood education. It serves as a text or supplement for infant-toddler courses; child care and early education classes; supervision and administration classes; social service classes for child care workers; child development and child psychology classes; and Head Start, preschool, child care, and family day care training.

The material in this book is designed to be practical rather than theoretical; however, theory abounds in the notes following each chapter. Readers who choose to skip the endnotes and go with the flow of the reading still receive a good grounding in the subject matter because the chapters are complete in themselves, without the notes. Suggestions have been made to incorporate the information in the notes into the text. I have resisted because doing so would lengthen the book and one of the most attractive features of the book is that it is short and easy to read.

What's New in This Edition Besides the Name

Expanded Definition of Diversity. This edition took a big step to expand diversity of all sorts. You can't just look at culture without considering the interplay of race, gender, ability, social class, status, income, sexual orientation, religion, and age. Those attributes of culture are now integrated into every chapter. The book has always been concerned about identity, culture, and oppression. Now even more, those three subjects are examined as factors in adult relations and in adults' decisions about how to care for and educate children. Promoting equity and helping early childhood professionals stand up against oppression have always been important goals of this book.

Coverage of Children with Special Needs. Among other new subjects, this edition of the book particularly emphasizes creating full inclusion programs so that children with special needs don't find themselves segregated. It's against the law to isolate children with disabilities from participating with their typically developing peers unless there is a compelling reason to do so. You'll find discussion of and examples related to ability, interwoven with religion, social class, and status, all of which are related to culture.

Expanded Audience. Other changes help the book appeal to a wider audience. The first edition was written mainly for professionals who worked with infants and toddlers. This edition goes beyond that one group to include all early childhood professionals—practitioners and administrators of all sorts, including directors and their staff, preschool and primary teachers, and family childcare providers. The book no longer focuses on childcare alone, but also on any kind of early care and education program, as is appropriate in a field where we no longer separate care and education in our terminology. Even going beyond programs for children, anyone providing a service to families with young children will find this book useful.

New Pedagogical Features. New pedagogical treatment makes the book more appealing to students. There are now focus questions at the beginning of each chapter and a summary at the end.

This always has been and will continue to be a process-oriented book designed to help readers look inward and work on themselves before they look outward at what they can do to promote positive attitudes toward diversity in others. There are three ultimate goals of the process. One is to help early care and education professionals improve their person-to-person skills in ways that honor diversity. The second is to uncover institutional policies and the resulting practices that are exclusionary. The final goal is to encourage people to work to change exclusive policies and practices. Maybe that goal is too radical for a book like this, but that's a logical next step when policies or practices are oppressive.

This book is not about activities for children to help them develop positive attitudes toward diversity. Louise Derman-Sparks's Antibias Curriculum book does that. This book is about adults interacting with each other in equitable and empowering ways. Adults are the models for children and no matter what adults tell or teach children about equity, it's the unspoken messages that are the most powerful lessons. This edition goes even further in helping readers improve their unspoken messages by understanding their own behaviors and improving their cross-cultural communication skills.

The numerous stories and examples have always made this book strong, and this edition contains even more. Photographs are a new addition. There is also a new feature called "Points to Ponder," which is designed to be thought provoking and perhaps lead to classroom discussions.

Updated Scholarship. A good deal has been written in the years since this book was last revised. The suggestions for the "For Further Reading" sections reflect the new literature. Also, a number of new resources appear in the bibliography—another popular feature of this book. One of the advantages of this little yellow book is that it opens doors for people. They get ideas from reading it, and then they can learn more by exploring the many suggested readings in the chapter endnotes and the bibliography. I often hear from people who found the chapter notes extremely stimulating and learned a lot by following where those notes led them. This is the kind of book that challenges people to go further and then shows them ways to do that. For some people this book has been the beginning of a path that they are still following.

Acknowledgments

I have learned so much more about diversity since the last edition that I want to acknowledge those who contributed to that learning. I don't mean to neglect the many people who in the past gave me the foundation on which to build what I am learning now. I'm still grateful to them, but my list grew unwieldy when I tried to include everyone who has ever helped or supported me in learning about diversity.

I want to give special recognition to a few people who have continually involved me in what they were doing so that I was pushed to learn, not only about them but also more about myself as a white person. These people supported me through the ups and downs that occur when the learning is emotional and some of the lessons are hard as I continued to discover what it means to be me in a racist society. Many thanks to Intisar Shareef, Marion Cowee, Dora Pulido-Tobiassen, Judith K. Bernhard, Hedy Chang, Lisa Lee, and Christina Lopez Morgan.

Several groups have added richness to my life, and being a member of them has increased my knowledge. One is a nameless group composed of fifteen people who came together at various times to make five videos called "Early Childhood Training Series: Diversity," produced by Magna Systems. The other five groups have names: BANDTEC (Bay Area Network for Diversity Training in Early Childhood); Leadership in Diversity, sponsored by the California Association for the Education of Young Children; Reconceptualizing Early Childhood Education; California Tomorrow; and WestEd Program for Infant-Toddler Caregivers. Thank you to the groups and all their members!

I want to acknowledge the following people who have enriched my thinking, added to my knowledge, and in some cases also helped me practice my communication skills: Susan Matoba Adler, Elena Aguirre, Cecelia Alvarado, Dianna Ballesteros, Isaura Barrera, Susan Bernheimer, Navaz Bhvanagri, Mimi Bloch, Phyllis Brady, Linda Brault, Holly Elissa Bruno, Barry Bussewitz, Gaile Cannella, Elsa Chahin, Olivia Chang, Marcela Clark, Rose Cole, Renatta Cooper, Gunilla Dahlberg, Barbara Daniels-Love, Louise Derman-Sparks, Diane Duval, Julie Olsen Edwards, Shaquam Edwards, Costanza Eggers-Pierola, Polly Elam, Enid Elliot, Sharon Elwell, Lyn Fasoli, Stephanie Feeney, Lily Wong Fillmore, MyTra Fitzpatrick, Lella Gandini, Magda Gerber, Eleanor Clement Glass, Richie Golden, Cathy Gutierrez Gomez, Lynn Graham, Patricia Greenfield, Jim Greenman, Deborah Greenwald, Sue Grieshaber, John Gunnarson, Stuart Guyton, Janice Hale, Ruth Anne Hammond, Marsha Hawley, Liliana Hensel, Luis Hernandez, Shanta and Milan Herzog, Marsha Howard, Helen Howell, Roberta Hunter, Tamar Jacobson, Meg Jerene, Rich Johnson, Betty Jones, Ellen Junn, Marjory Keenan, Francie Kendall, Rodney and Carmel Kenner, Shirley Kessler, Ron Lally, Chris Lamm, Gabriela Lara, Cynthia Lashley, Susan Leong Lee, Lee Klinger Lesser, Beatriz Leyva-Cutler, Rhodes Lockwood, Antonia Lopez, Lynda Lowe-Montgomery, Sally Lubeck, Lynne Lyle, Glenda MacNaughton, Sehba Mahmood, Ruth Major, Peter Mangione, Constance Marine, Rebecca Marine, Margie McLean, Miriam McCaleb, Johnnie McGuire, June McLoughlin, Liz Memmel, Jean Monroe, Alice Nakahata, Lillian Nealy, Bonnie and Roger Neugebauer, Pat Nourot, Kate Ord, Carol Pinto, Maureen Perry, Jay Price, Gabriella Püspöky, Douglas Quiet, Leslie Rameka, Jean Rockel, Carrie Rothstein-Fisch, Wai-Ling Rubic, Sylvia Sanchez, Chris Simms, Heidi Smith, Mary Smithberger, Michelle Soltero, Lourdes Diaz Soto, Anne Stonehouse, Debra Sullivan, Donna Sullivan, Daisy Talob, Anna Tardos, Dolores Terrazas, Lisa Terreni, Equoya Thomas, Joe Tobin, Elise Trumbull, LuAnne Venham, Kisha Williamson-Champion, Cheryl Williams-Jackson, Lily Wong, Lloyd Wood, and Marlene Zepeda.

Thanks also goes to those instructors who provided feedback on the fourth edition of the text:

Kristi Almeida-Bowin, Moorpark College
Tamar Andrews, California State University, Los Angeles
Corinne Greenberg, Santa Fe Community College
San Dee Hodges, College of the Sequoias
Mary Sebade, Wayne State College
May Silva, Cerritos College

Special thanks to Sue Bredekamp and Carol Brunson Phillips who helped me think through hard issues centering on cultural diversity and developmentally appropriate practice.

Last, I want to thank my family, and especially my husband, Frank, who gave me some of my early lessons on appreciating diversity.

NOTES

1. American Psychological Association, "Guidelines on Multicultural Education, Training, Research, Practice and Organizational Change for Psychologists." American Psychologist 58, no. 5. (May 2003), pp. 377–402.

Contents

CHAPTER ONE

Perceiving and Responding to Differences 9

Focus Questions 8

Culture Is Unconscious 10

A Narrow View 10

What Are the Effects of Being Ignored? 10

Broadening the View 11

Cultural Pluralism 12

Cultural Pluralism and Early Care and Education

Programs 13

Babies Are Raised to Be Members of Their Cultures 14

Synchrony Is Important 16

Misunderstandings 17

More Examples of Cultural Differences 18

“Let’s Figure This Out” 19

A Contrast in Values 20

Differing Perspectives on Dependence 20

Focus on Themes and Trends 22

Transformative Education 23

Summary 24

For Further Reading 24

Notes 26

CHAPTER TWO

Communicating Across Cultures 29

Focus Questions 28

Interpreting the Meaning of Behavior 29

The Importance of Teachers Understanding Cross-
Cultural Communication 30

Learning to Communicate Across Cultures 32

Personal Space 32

Smiling 33

Eye Contact	33
Touch	34
Silence	35
Time Concepts	36
The Influence of Teachers' Attitudes on Their Learning	37
Summary	38
For Further Reading	39
Notes	39

CHAPTER THREE

Working with Diversity Issues 43

Focus Questions	42
Examples of Cultural Conflicts	43
Conflicting Definitions and Goals	47
An Example of Better Teacher-Parent Communication	48
Five Outcomes to Cultural Conflicts	50
Resolution Through Negotiation Resulting in Compromise	50
Ongoing Management of the Unresolved Conflict	50
Teacher Education	51
Parent Education	51
Mutual Education	51
Should Teachers Ever Convince Parents to Change?	52
Parent Education and Teacher Education	52
A Process Called RERUN for Working with Diversity Issues	53
Suggestions for Approaching Cultural Conflicts	55
Summary	57
For Further Reading	58
Notes	59

CHAPTER FOUR

A Framework for Understanding Differences 61

Focus Questions	60
What's an Individualist and What's a Collectivist?	62
Eating and Sleeping: Two Contrasting Patterns	65
Pattern One: Schedules	66
Pattern Two: Natural Rhythms	66
More Diversity Issues around Feeding and Eating	69
Dealing with a Conflict By Creating a Dialogue	69

Varying Perspectives on Early Self-Feeding	70
Taking Responsibility for the Amount That a Child Eats	72
Suggestions for Resolving Conflicts Over Eating and Sleeping	73
Summary	74
For Further Reading	75
Notes	76

CHAPTER FIVE

Attachment and Separation 79

Focus Questions	78
Comparing Babies in Two Families	79
Baby A	79
Baby B	80
A Theme in Attachment: Cutting or Not Cutting the Apron Strings	82
The Influence of Life Threats on the Attachment Process	84
Parent Behaviors	85
Separating Survival Practices from Cultural Values	86
Summary	88
For Further Reading	89
Notes	89

CHAPTER SIX

Differing Perspectives on Learning through Play 93

Focus Questions	92
Adult Attitudes Toward Play Are Influenced by Culture	93
Babies Playing	94
Adult Reactions to The Amount of Stimulation in The Scene	96
Cultural Differences Related to Stimulation	97
Preschoolers Playing	97
Adult Reactions to This Scene	98
Themes Reflected by the Comments	99
People Versus Object Orientation	99
Choice	100
Adult Role	101

Emphasis on Words Versus Nonverbal Communication	103
Defusing a Cross-Cultural Encounter	104
An Example of a Cross-Cultural Encounter	105
Summary	106
For Further Reading	107
Notes	108

CHAPTER SEVEN

Socialization, Guidance, and Discipline 111

Focus Questions	110
Differing Goals of Socialization: Stand Out or Fit In	111
The Socialization Process	113
Sample Conflicts	114
Other Areas of Conflict	115
Guidance and Discipline	118
Internalized Versus Externalized Controls	119
Time-Out	121
Physical Punishment	122
Power and Authority	124
Learning to Read Indirect Communication	125
Summary	127
For Further Reading	128
Notes	129

Bibliography B-1

Credits C-1

Index I-1

Introduction

This book is about honoring diversity in the work early childhood professionals do with children and their families. It's about appreciating differences, living with them, gaining from them, and even celebrating them. To avoid deficit models requires understanding ways of thinking and behaviors that deviate from what is considered the norm. This book is designed to increase your knowledge so you can see behaviors that you consider inadequate in a positive light. Often behaviors that don't seem to be "normal" are really competent adaptive responses that contribute to the survival and enhancement of the individual or group. In other words, this book is about regarding differences with mutual respect as well as looking at them as sources of strength.

CHALLENGES IN HONORING DIVERSITY

Honoring diversity can be hard when ideas about right and wrong clash. Imagine this scene.

You are an early childhood professional visiting other programs. You walk into a classroom in one center and find the adults scattered around the room, seated on low chairs or down on the floor at eye level with the children, who are all around 4 years old. The adults are fully focused on the children, talking to them, responding to them, and now and then bringing out some new materials or rearranging the environment. Once in a while, they have to help settle a conflict between two children. They aren't talking to each other. These adults are consciously doing what the literature tells them is good child development practice. They are also unconsciously reproducing the role of an old-fashioned, mainstream, nuclear-family housewife—the mythical one who was always there for her children, raising them in a fashion that kept her isolated from other adults. Part of this role is to focus on children as individuals, give them the attention they need, and to help each become his or her own person.

Now imagine yourself walking into a different setting.

It's a similar room, but this time the adults are sitting on adult-size furniture in one area talking to each other. One holds a baby on her lap, another has a toddler standing at her knee. Most of the other younger children are playing at the adults' feet; the older ones are scattered around the room. The adults are more focused on each other than the children, yet they manage subtly to incorporate the children into their adult world without shifting their focus dramatically when they do. They seem to know what's going on in the room at every minute, although they obviously aren't supervising. They are definitely not doing "good child development practice." They are, however, reflecting an upbringing in an extended family or kinship network where children fit into adult situations. These adults are not concerned with making the children into individuals or making sure that each is his or her own person, rather they are more interested in making sure that the children get along with each other and not disturb anybody.

It's easy to guess that a trained early childhood professional would find the first situation superior to the second one and would find it difficult to honor diversity. When something doesn't match your training, style, set of goals, or beliefs about what's good for children, accepting it is a challenge.

OPERATING OUT OF UNCONSCIOUS SYSTEMS

What you saw in the previous two scenes represented diverse values, ways of doing things, beliefs about how things ought to be. The two scenes also showed how people are governed by systems that are often out of the area of their consciousness. We become conscious of our systems when they bump up against ones that are different, and we notice that we have a reaction. I'm willing to bet that one of the previous scenes triggered a reaction in you.

In early care and education programs we are lucky to be in the position of potentially discovering an enormous amount of information about ourselves and how our systems work. Even if there isn't obvious diversity in the program's population, there is bound to be at least one person or family considered weird, different, or difficult who doesn't follow what you regard as right, sane, or normal. You can begin to see your own system working when you think about or interact with that person or family.