

CANADIAN EDITION

Interplay

THE PROCESS OF INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION

Ronald B. Adler • Lawrence B. Rosenfeld
Russell F. Proctor II • Constance Winder

CANADIAN EDITION

Interplay

THE PROCESS OF INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION

Ronald B. Adler

Lawrence B. Rosenfeld

Russell F. Proctor II

Constance Winder

Original Contributions by Neil Towne

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

70 Wynford Drive, Don Mills, Ontario M3C 1J9
www.oup.com/ca

Oxford University Press is a department of the University of Oxford.
It furthers the University's objective of excellence in research, scholarship, and education by publishing worldwide in

Oxford New York
Auckland Cape Town Dar es Salaam Hong Kong Karachi
Kuala Lumpur Madrid Melbourne Mexico City Nairobi
New Delhi Shanghai Taipei Toronto

With offices in
Argentina Austria Brazil Chile Czech Republic France Greece
Guatemala Hungary Italy Japan Poland Portugal Singapore
South Korea Switzerland Thailand Turkey Ukraine Vietnam

Oxford is a trade mark of Oxford University Press in the UK and in certain other countries

Published in Canada
by Oxford University Press

Copyright © Oxford University Press Canada 2006

The moral rights of the author have been asserted

Database right Oxford University Press (maker)

First published 2006

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means,
without the prior permission in writing of Oxford University Press, or as expressly permitted by law, or under terms agreed with the appropriate reprographics rights organization. Enquiries concerning reproduction outside the scope of the above should be sent to the Rights Department, Oxford University Press, at the address above.

You must not circulate this book in any other binding or cover and you must impose this same condition on any acquirer.

Library and Archives Canada Cataloguing in Publication Data

Interplay: the process of interpersonal communication /
Ronald B. Adler ... [et al.]. — 1st Canadian ed.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 13: 978-019-542164-4 ISBN 10: 0-19-542164-7

1. Interpersonal communication—Textbooks. I Adler, Ronald B. (Ronald Brian), 1946-

BF637.C45I686 2006 302.2 C2005-907438-8

Cover Design: Joan Dempsey
Cover Image: First Light / digitalvision

1 2 3 4 - 09 08 07 06

This book is printed on permanent (acid-free) paper ♻.

Printed in Canada

Preface

It is hard to think of any academic subject more immediately important and valuable to students than interpersonal communication. Good personal relationships can make life worth living, and unsatisfying ones can make us miserable. Most students recognize this fact, and they enter the course ready to acquire information and skills that they can put to use in their own lives.

Despite the obvious importance of the subject, designing an academic course (and writing a textbook) on interpersonal communication is not an easy task. On the one hand, instructors and authors must avoid presenting the considerable amount of scholarship on the subject in so much detail that first-time students are overwhelmed. On the other hand, we have to avoid oversimplification so that the students don't dismiss the material as 'just common sense'. The whole package must fit within an academic term and be designed in a way that facilitates teaching and learning.

Basic Approach of the Book

This edition of Interplay builds on the approach that has served professors and students well in the past. It strives to give first-time students a useful, compelling, and accurate introduction to the academic study of interpersonal communication. If we have done our job, the reader will come away with a new appreciation of how scholarship about communication in interpersonal relationships can make a difference in everyday life.

To that end, this edition retains the approach that will be familiar to long-time users:

- An accessible writing style based on the belief that even complicated ideas can be presented in a straightforward way.
- A commitment to showing how scholarship offers insights about the process of interpersonal communication. This edition cites more than one thousand sources, many of which are new to this edition.

- The use of a variety of thought-provoking photos, sidebars, and cartoons that illustrate points in the text in a way that is more interesting and compelling than text alone.

The coverage of the topics also retain the best features of the previous edition:

- A clean presentation of a communication model and its implications (Chapter 1)
- Information on how communicators manage their identities on the Internet (Chapter 2)
- A discussion of how successful relationships depend on negotiation of shared narratives (Chapter 3)
- An examination of types of emotions and influences on emotional expression, including personality and gender (Chapter 4)
- Research findings on the role of communication in increasing physical attractiveness (Chapter 6)
- A balanced treatment of the risks and benefits of self-disclosure and methods of maintaining privacy in personal relationships (Chapter 9)
- Material on reasons for defensiveness (Chapter 10)

Special Features of the Canadian Edition

Almost half a century ago, Marshall McLuhan coined the metaphor of the world as a 'global village' where members of every nation are connected by communication technology. Since then, demographic changes have been transforming Canada into a microcosm of that global village. This new Canadian edition features expanded coverage of how cultural differences and new technologies affect interpersonal communication.

Canada's multicultural experience is reflected in the book's emphasis on strategies for effective intercultural communication. Issues of language and identity are explored as they pertain to First Nations people and francophones. The comparisons of the cultural aspects of communication are based on hundreds of research studies conducted in Canada, the United States, Europe, Australia, Africa, and Asia.

This edition contains several improvements that reflect both progress in the field and refinements that help make the material clearer and more useful to students. Some notable changes include:

- New information on research, theory, and skills that will help the reader understand how relationships in the family and at work can operate most effectively (Chapter 12)
- New ‘Skill Builder’ boxes to help students apply their knowledge to work-related scenarios

Enhanced Pedagogy

This edition of Interplay builds on the pedagogical approach that has successfully helped students appreciate how scholarship leads to better understanding of communication in the ‘real world’.

New ‘Self-Assessment’ Instruments

Each chapter contains a ‘Self-Assessment’ instrument that allows readers to analyze their current communication behaviour and its consequences. For example, these activities help students recognize how interpersonal their own relationships are (Chapter 1), what their listening styles are (Chapter 7), how emotionally resilient they are and how much they self-disclose (Chapters 4 and 9), and how they handle verbal aggression (Chapter 10).

New ‘Focus on Research’ Profiles

In every chapter, ‘Focus on Research’ sidebars highlight scholarship that students will find interesting and useful.

New profiles that address a diverse array of topics, including balancing interpersonal warmth and efficiency in customer service (Chapter 1); differences between how men and women communicate online (Chapter 2); the risks of misunderstandings when same-sex friends express affection (Chapter 3); how self-talk affects health and well-being (Chapter 4); the many interpretations of ‘flaming’ in e-mail messages (Chapter 5); how cultural misunderstandings contributed to the mistreatment of First Nations girls (Chapter 6); the development of new communication styles by health care professionals serving First Nations communities (Chapter 7); how children of immigrants manage the different expectations of their parents’ culture and Canadian culture (Chapter 8); how social networks differ in rural and urban Canada (Chapter 9); bullying in the workplace (Chapter 10); conflicts in same-sex and opposite-sex friendships (Chapter 11); and topic avoidance in stepfamilies (Chapter 12).

Readers who are familiar with the earlier, US editions will notice that the structure of the book has been partly reorganized, spelling and usage have been Canadianized, and the writing style has been adapted for a Canadian readership.

Ancillaries

An updated, expanded Instructor’s Manual by Ann Mitchell and Cami Bergquist of the University of Wisconsin-Waukesha and Connie Winder of George Brown College gives both experienced and new instructors strategies for teaching efficiently and effectively.

The Interplay website at www.oup.com/ca/he/companion/adlerinterplay provides a wealth of resources for instructors and students, including reviews of popular films that illustrate communication principles covered in the text.

Also available is a test bank containing class-tested examination questions that can be customized to fit each instructor’s focus.

Acknowledgements

Creating a book like Interplay simply isn’t possible without the help of many talented people. We are grateful to the many colleagues whose suggestions have helped make this book a far better one: Jerry Buley, Arizona State University; Patrick Ecker, Jefferson Community College;

Tara M. Emmers-Sommer, University of Arizona; Elizabeth Graham, Ohio University; Hyla Rosenberg, Lane Community College; Beth A. Semic, University of Nevada-Las Vegas; and Hillary Wilkerson, University of Wyoming. The suggestions of reviewers from previous editions continue to pay dividends, and so we again thank Ruth Anderson, Nick Backus, Leonard Barchak, Kimberly Batty-Herbert, Donald Berg, Brian Betz, Vincent Bloom, Joyce Buttermore, Marcia Dixon, Bruce Dorries, Robert Dretz, Veronica Duncan, Georgia Duran, Eric Eisenberg, George Enell, Dave Engen, Leslye Evans, Mary Forestieri, Susan Fox, Ava Good, Barbara Gordon, Debra Grodin, Steven Hartong, Martha Haun, Kenneth Howard, Karen Inouye, Pam Johnson, Richard Joyce, Virginia Katz, Thurman Knight, Derek Lane, Terri Main, John McGrath, Sandra Metts, Rebecca Mikesell, Lori Montalbano-Phelps, Marilou Morris, Joe Munshaw, David Natharius, Nan Peck, Carol Peirce-Jones, Lynn Phelps, William Rawlins, Heather Rosenfeld, Dirk Scheerhorn, Chuck Schilling, Michael Schliessmann, Carol Shulman, Anntarie Lanita Simms, Dickie Spurgeon, Carolyn Stephens, Edwina Stoll, Todd Thomas, Eleanor Tucker, Anita Vaccaro, Charmaine Wilson, and Sonia Zamanou.

We owe a tremendous debt to the team of congenial and hard-working professionals at Oxford University Press: Peter Labella, Chris Rogers, Robert Miller, Elyse Dubin, Christine D'Antonio, Eve Siegel, Scott Burns, Valerie Hartman, Jeanne Ambrosio, and the indispensable Sean Mahoney. Carol Wada's professional and personal skills and her familiarity with Interplay have made better both the process of writing and the book you are reading.

We would like to thank Janet Bollow Alleyne for her contributions to the book's design. Sherri Adler enlivened the book by selecting most of the photos and illustrations. Their considerable talents are obvious, and we are grateful for them.

Finally, we thank our wives and families for their tolerance during the many hours when we put our own interpersonal relationships 'on hold' to work on Interplay.

R.B.A.
L.B.R.
R.F.P.

Many people have helped to adapt this textbook for Canadian readers. I would like to thank the wise and supportive people at Oxford University Press in Toronto—David Stover, Roberta Osborne, Rachael Cayley, Lisa Meschino, Phyllis Wilson, and Kathleen McGill—and my copy editor, Freya Godard. I have very much appreciated the generosity of my students and colleagues at George Brown College. Finally, I would like to thank my family, Gerlando, Owen, and Oliver for making my life sparkle.

C.W.

Chapter One

Why We Communicate

- Physical Needs
- Identity Needs
- Social Needs
- Practical Needs

The Communication Process

- A Model of Communication
- Insights from the Communication Model
- Communication Principles
- Communication Misconceptions

Interpersonal Communication Defined

- Quantitative and Qualitative Definitions
- Personal and Impersonal Communication: A Matter of Balance
- Interpersonal Communication and Technology

Interpersonal Communication and Cultural Diversity

- Culture
- Intercultural Communication
- Interpersonal and Intercultural Communication

Comparison of Canadian and American Culture

- Attitudes toward Violence
- Tolerance of Diversity
- Relative Status of Men and Women

Communication Competence

- Communication Competence Defined
- Motivation and Open-mindedness
- Knowledge of Other Cultures and Mindfulness
- Characteristics of Competent Communication

Summary

Activities

Discussion Questions

Key Terms

- Channel
- Co-culture
- Cognitive complexity
- Communication competence
- Computer-mediated communication (CMC)
- Content message
- Culture
- Dyad
- Ethnocentrism
- Environment
- Feedback
- Intercultural communication
- Noise (external, physiological, psychological)
- Qualitative interpersonal communication
- Quantitative interpersonal communication
- Relational message
- Self-monitoring
- Stereotyping
- Transactional

Brief Contents

Preface ix

PART ONE FOUNDATIONS OF INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION

- CHAPTER ONE Interpersonal Process xii
- CHAPTER TWO Communication and the Self 34
- CHAPTER THREE Perceiving Others 66

PART TWO CREATING AND RESPONDING TO MESSAGES

- CHAPTER FOUR Emotions 94
- CHAPTER FIVE Language 122
- CHAPTER SIX Non-verbal Communication 154
- CHAPTER SEVEN Listening 186

PART THREE DIMENSIONS OF INTERPERSONAL RELATIONSHIPS

- CHAPTER EIGHT Dynamics of Interpersonal Relationships 216
- CHAPTER NINE Intimacy and Distance in Relationships 248
- CHAPTER TEN Communication Climate 282
- CHAPTER ELEVEN Managing Conflict 310

PART FOUR CONTEXTS OF INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION

- CHAPTER TWELVE Communicating with Family and at Work 342

- Glossary 366
- References 373
- Name Index 406
- Subject Index 409

Contents

Preface ix

PART ONE FOUNDATIONS OF INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION

CHAPTER ONE

Interpersonal Process xii

Why We Communicate 2

Physical Needs 3

Identity Needs 4

Social Needs 4

Practical Needs 5

The Communication Process 6

A Model of Communication 6

Insights from the Communication Model 6

Communication Principles 9

Communication Misconceptions 12

Interpersonal Communication Defined 13

Quantitative and Qualitative Definitions 13

Personal and Impersonal Communication: A Matter of Balance 15

Interpersonal Communication and Technology 16

Interpersonal Communication and Cultural Diversity 19

Culture 20

Intercultural Communication 20

Impersonal and Intercultural Communication 21

Comparison of Canadian and American Culture 22

Attitudes toward Violence 23

Tolerance of Diversity 24

Relative Status of Men and Women 24

Communication Competence 25

Communication Competence Defined 25

Motivation and Open-mindedness 27

Knowledge of Other Cultures and Open-mindedness 28

Characteristics of Competent Communication 29

Summary 31

Activities 32

Discussion Questions 33

CHAPTER TWO

Communication and the Self 34

Communication and the Self-Concept 36

How the Self-Concept Develops 37

Self-Concept Development in Context 40

Cultural Values and Norms 41

Individualism versus Collectivism 42

Power Distance 43

Uncertainty Avoidance 44

Achievement versus Nurturing 45

Characteristics of the Self-Concept 46

The Self-Fulfilling Prophecy and Communication 50

Changing Your Self-Concept 54

Presenting the Self: Communication as Identity Management 55

Public and Private Selves 55

Characteristics of Identity Management 56

Why Manage Impressions? 59

How Do We Manage Impressions? 60

Identity Management and Honesty 62

Summary 63

Activities 63

Discussion Questions 65

CHAPTER THREE

Perceiving Others 66

The Perception Process 68

Selection 69

Organization 69

Interpretation 72

Negotiation 73

Influences on Perception 74

Physiological Influences 74

Psychological Influences 76

Social Influences 77

Cultural Influences	79	We Favour Negative Impressions	83
Common Tendencies in Perception	81	Perceiving Others More Accurately	84
We Judge Ourselves More Charitably Than We Do Others	81	Perception Checking	84
We Are Influenced by Our Expectations	82	Building Empathy	86
We Are Influenced by the Obvious	82	Summary	90
We Cling to First Impressions	82	Activities	91
We Assume Others Are Like Us	83	Discussion Questions	92

PART TWO CREATING AND RESPONDING TO MESSAGES

CHAPTER FOUR

Emotions 94

What Are Emotions? 96

- Physiological Changes 96
- Non-verbal Reactions 96
- Cognitive Interpretations 97
- Verbal Expression 98

Types of Emotions 98

- First-Order and Second-Order Emotions 99
- Primary and Mixed Emotions 99
- Intense and Mild Emotions 99

Influences on Emotional Expression 100

- Personality 100
- Culture 101
- Biological Sex and Gender 102
- Social Conventions 104
- Social Roles 104
- Fear of Self-Disclosure 105
- Emotional Contagion 105

Guidelines for Expressing Emotions 105

- Recognize Your Feelings 106
- Choose the Best Language 106
- Share Multiple Feelings 107
- Recognize the Difference between Feeling and Acting 108
- Accept Responsibility for Your Feelings 109
- Choose the Best Time and Place to Express Your Feelings 109

Managing Difficult Emotions 110

- Facilitative and Debilitative Emotions 110
- Thoughts as a Cause of Feelings 111
- Irrational Thinking and Debilitative Emotions 112
- Minimizing Debilitative Emotions 118

Summary 120

Activities 120

Discussion Questions 121

CHAPTER FIVE

Language 122

The Nature of Language 124

- Language Is Symbolic 124
- Language Is Governed by Rules 125
- Language Is Subjective 126

The Influence of Language 127

- Naming and Identity 127
- Credibility and Status 130
- Affiliation, Attraction, and Interest 131
- Power 131
- Sexism and Racism 132

Uses (and Abuses) of Language 134

- Precision and Vagueness 134
- The Language of Responsibility 140
- Disruptive Language 142

Male and Female Language Use 143

- Content 144
- Reasons for Communicating 144
- Conversational Style 145
- Non-sex Variables 146

Culture and Language 147

- High- versus Low-Context Cultures 148

Summary 151

Activities 152

Discussion Questions 153

CHAPTER SIX

Non-verbal Communication 154

Non-verbal Communication Defined 156

Characteristics of Non-verbal Communication 157

All Behaviour Has Communicative Value 157

Non-verbal Communication Is Primarily

Relational 158

Non-verbal Communication Is Ambiguous 160

Non-verbal Communication Is Influenced by Culture 161

Functions of Non-verbal Communication 162

Repeating 162

Substituting 163

Complementing and Accenting 163

Regulating 163

Contradicting 164

Deceiving 164

Types of Non-verbal Communication 166

Face and Eyes 166

Body Movement 167

Touch 169

Voice 170

Proxemics and Territoriality 172

Time 175

Physical Attractiveness 176

Clothing 176

Physical Environment 180

Summary 182

Activities 182

Discussion Questions 184

CHAPTER SEVEN

Listening 186

The Importance of Listening 188

Reasons for Listening 189

The Challenge of Listening 190

Hearing Is Not Listening 190

Listening Is Not Easy 190

All Listeners Do Not Receive the Same
Message 191

Poor Listening Habits 192

Components of Listening 193

Hearing 193

Attending 193

Understanding 194

Remembering 194

Responding 194

Types of Listening Responses 195

Silent Listening 196

Questioning 198

Paraphrasing 200

Empathizing 203

Supporting 204

Analyzing 207

Evaluating 207

Advising 210

Which Style to Use? 210

Summary 212

Activities 214

Discussion Questions 215

PART THREE DIMENSIONS OF INTERPERSONAL RELATIONSHIPS

CHAPTER EIGHT

Dynamics of Interpersonal Relationships

216

Why We Form Relationships 218

Appearance 219

Similarity 219

Complementarity 220

Rewards 221

Competence 222

Proximity 222

Disclosure 223

Communication and Relational Dynamics 223

Developmental Models of Interpersonal
Relationships 223

Dialectical Perspectives on Relational
Dynamics 231

Characteristics of Relational Development 236

Communicating about Relationships 237

Content and Relational Messages 237

Expression of Relational Messages 238

Gaining Compliance in Interpersonal Relationships 238

Types of Compliance-Gaining Strategies 239

Which Strategy to Choose? 243

Summary 245Activities 246*Discussion Questions 246*CHAPTER NINE*Intimacy and Distance in Relationships 248*Intimacy and Distance: Striking a Balance 250

Dimensions of Intimacy 250

Dimensions of Distance 251

The Dialectics of Intimacy and Distance 252

Influences on Intimacy and Distance 253

Male and Female Intimacy Styles 253

Cultural Influences on Intimacy 256

Self-Disclosure in Relationships 258

A Definition of Self-Disclosure 258

Degrees of Self-Disclosure 260

A Model of Self-Disclosure 262

Risks and Benefits of Self-Disclosure 263

Alternatives to Self-Disclosure 269

Lying 270

Equivocation 273

Hinting 275

The Ethics of Evasion 275

Guidelines for Self-Disclosure 276

Is the Other Person Important to You? 276

Is the Risk of Disclosing Reasonable? 276

Is the Self-Disclosure Appropriate? 277

Is the Disclosure Relevant to the Situation at Hand? 277

Is the Disclosure Reciprocated? 277

Will the Effect Be Constructive? 278

Is the Self-Disclosure Clear and Understandable? 278

Summary 278Activities 280*Discussion Questions 281*CHAPTER TEN*Communication Climate 282*What Is Communication Climate? 284*How Communication Climates Develop 284

Levels of Message Confirmation 285

Defensiveness 291

Climate Patterns 292

Creating Positive Climates 294

Evaluation versus Description 294

Control versus Problem Orientation 295

Strategy versus Spontaneity 296

Neutrality versus Empathy 297

Superiority versus Equality 297

Certainty versus Provisionalism 298

Transforming Negative Climates 300

Seek More Information 300

Agree with the Critic 303

Summary 308Activities 308*Discussion Questions 309*CHAPTER ELEVEN*Managing Conflict 310*What Is Conflict? 312

Expressed Struggle 313

Perceived Incompatible Goals 313

Perceived Scarce Rewards 313

Interdependence 313

Inevitability 313

Functional and Dysfunctional Conflicts 314

Integration versus Polarization 315

Co-operation versus Opposition 315

Confirmation versus Disconfirmation 316

Agreement versus Coercion 316

De-escalation versus Escalation 316

Focusing versus Drifting 316

Foresight versus Shortsightedness 317

Positive versus Negative Results 317

Individual Conflict Styles 318

Non-assertion 319

Indirect Communication 320

Passive Aggression 320

Direct Aggression 321

Assertion 321

Which Style to Use? 323

Conflict in Relational Systems 324

Complementary, Symmetrical, and Parallel Styles 324

Intimate and Aggressive Styles	325	Lose-Lose	332
Conflict Rituals	326	Compromise	332
Variables in Conflict Styles	327	Win-Win	334
Biological Sex and Gender	327	Summary	339
Culture	329	Activities	339
Methods of Conflict Resolution	330	Discussion Questions	340
Win-Lose	330

PART FOUR CONTEXTS OF INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION

CHAPTER TWELVE

Communicating with Family and at Work 342

Communication in Families	344
Types of Family Communication	344
Elements of Family Communication	346
Effective Communication in Families	350

Glossary	366
References	373
Name Index	406
Subject Index	409

Relationships at Work	353
Communicating in Organizations	353
Relationships in Work Groups	355
Interviewing	359
Summary	364
Activities	364
Discussion Questions	365

Interpersonal Process

After studying the material in this chapter . . .

You Should Understand:

1. The needs that effective communication can satisfy.
2. Four insights from the communication model.
3. Five key principles of communication.
4. Four misconceptions about communication.
5. Quantitative and qualitative definitions of interpersonal communication.
6. The characteristics of competent communication.

You Should Be Able To:

1. Identify examples of the physical, identity, social, and practical needs you attempt to satisfy by communicating.
2. Demonstrate how the communication model applies to your interpersonal communication.
3. Describe the degrees to which your communication is qualitatively impersonal and interpersonal, and describe the consequences of this combination.
4. Identify situations in which you communicate competently, and those in which your competence is less than satisfactory.

Everyone communicates. Students and professors, parents and children, employers and employees, friends, strangers, and enemies—all communicate. We have been communicating with others from the moment of our birth and will keep on doing so until we die.

Why study an activity you've done your entire life? There are three reasons. First, studying interpersonal communication will give you a new look at a familiar topic. For instance, in a few pages you will find that some people can go years—even a lifetime—without communicating in a truly interpersonal manner. In this sense, exploring human communication is rather like studying anatomy or botany—everyday objects and processes take on new meaning.

A second reason for studying the subject has to do with the staggering amount of time we spend communicating. For example, a study of over one thousand employees at Fortune 1000 companies revealed that workers send and receive an average of 178 messages every working day (Ginsburg, 1999). Another survey (Nellermoe et al., 1999) revealed that business professionals spend 80 per cent of their business day communicating with colleagues and clients.

There is a third, more compelling reason for studying interpersonal communication. To put it bluntly, all of us could learn to communicate more effectively. Our friendships, jobs, and studies suffer because we fail to deal with others as effectively as is necessary. A group of senior executives cited lack of interpersonal skills as one of the top three skill deficits in today's workforce (Marchant, 1999). In an American survey, 'lack of effective communication' was given as the cause of relational breakups—including divorce—more often than anything else, including money, relatives or in-laws, sexual problems, previous relationships, or children (National Communication Association, 1999). If you pause now and make a mental list of communication problems you have encountered, you'll see that, no matter how successful your relationships are at home, with friends, at school, and at work, there is plenty of room for improvement in your everyday life. The information that follows will help you improve the way you communicate with some of the people who matter most to you.

Why We Communicate

Research demonstrating the importance of communication has been around longer than you might think. Frederick II, emperor of the Holy Roman Empire from 1220 to 1250, was called stupor mundi—'wonder of the world'—by his admiring subjects. Along with his administrative and military talents, Frederick was a leading scientist of his time. A medieval historian described one of his dramatic, if inhumane, experiments:

He bade foster mothers and nurses to suckle the children, to bathe and wash them, but in no way to prattle with them, for he wanted to learn whether they would speak the Hebrew language, which was the oldest, or Greek, or Latin, or Arabic, or perhaps the language of their parents, of whom they had been born. But he laboured in vain because all the children died. For they could not live without the petting and joyful faces and loving words of their foster mothers. (Ross and McLaughlin, 1949, p. 366)

Fortunately, contemporary researchers have found less drastic ways to illustrate the importance of communication. In one study of isolation, five subjects were paid to remain alone in a locked room. One lasted for eight days. Three held out for two days, one commenting, 'Never again.' The fifth subject lasted only two hours (Schachter, 1959, pp. 9–10).

The need for contact and companionship is just as strong outside the laboratory, as people who have led solitary lives by choice or necessity have discovered. W. Carl Jackson, an adventurer who sailed across the Atlantic Ocean alone in fifty-one days, summarized the feelings common to most loners:

I found the loneliness of the second month almost excruciating. I always thought of myself as self-sufficient, but I found life without people had no meaning. I had a definite need for somebody to talk to, someone real, alive, and breathing.

You might object to stories like this, claiming that solitude would be a welcome relief from the irritations of everyday life. It's true that all of us need solitude, often more than we get. On the other hand, each of us has a point beyond which we do not want to be alone. Beyond this point, solitude changes from a pleasurable to a painful condition. In other words, we all need people. We all need to communicate.

Physical Needs

Communication is so important that its presence or absence affects physical health. Recent studies confirm that people who process a negative experience by talking about it report improved life satisfaction, as well as enhanced mental and physical health, compared to those who only think about it (Sousa, 2002). A study conducted with police officers found that being able to talk easily to colleagues and supervisors about work-related trauma was related to better physical and mental health (Stephens and Long, 2000).

In extreme cases, communication can even become a matter of life or death. It is not surprising that one of the worst punishment that inmates in western prisons are subjected to is solitary confinement. Known to North American prisoners as 'the hole', segregation units have been described by both psychologists and inmates as far more damaging and harder to bear than physical punishment. The isolation from both the physical world (so that one does not know if it is day or night or what the weather is like) and the complete lack of meaningful communication with other people combine to create a situation in which most inmates would prefer to die. In his book, Justice behind the Walls, law professor and human rights advocate Michael Jackson (2002) describes the effects of solitary confinement on Canadian prisoners.

My journey has taken me into segregation units—contemporary versions of Dante's Inferno—where prisoners scream abuse and hurl their bodily fluids and guards respond violently with fire hoses and nightsticks. I have sat with prisoners hopeless beyond tears as they contemplate suicide, and knelt at a segregation cell door, scanning through the narrow food slot the barren interior of a prisoner's world, begging a man not to use a razor blade to slash his eyeballs.

Satisfying communication isn't a necessity just for prisoners. Evidence gathered by medical researchers (e.g., Cohen et al., 1997; Hall and Havens, 2002; Maté, 2003; Ruberman, 1992) and social scientists (e.g., Duck, 1998) shows that satisfying relationships can literally be a matter of life and death for people who lead normal lives. For example:

- People who lack strong relationships run two to three times the risk of early death, regardless of whether they smoke, drink alcoholic beverages, or exercise regularly.

- Terminal cancer strikes socially isolated people more often than those who have close personal relationships.
- Divorced, separated, and widowed people are five to ten times more likely to need psychiatric hospitalization than their married counterparts.
- Perceived loneliness is one of the strongest predictors of poor health among the elderly.
- Pregnant women under stress and without supportive relationships have three times as many complications as pregnant women who suffer from the same stress but have strong social support.
- Social isolation is a major risk factor contributing to heart disease, comparable to physiological factors such as an inadequate diet, cigarette smoking, obesity, and lack of physical activity.
- Socially isolated people are four times as susceptible to the common cold as those who have active social networks.

Research like this demonstrates the importance of satisfying personal relationships, and it explains the conclusion of social scientists that communication is essential (Baumeister and Leary, 1995). Not everyone needs the same amount of contact, and the quality of communication is almost certainly as important as the quantity. Nonetheless, the point remains: personal communication is essential for our well-being. To paraphrase a popular song, 'people who need people' aren't 'the luckiest people in the world': They're the only people!

Identity Needs

Communication does more than enable us to survive. It is the way—indeed, the major way—we learn who we are (Fogel et al., 2002). As you'll read in Chapter 2, our sense of identity comes from the way we interact with other people. Are we smart or stupid, attractive or ugly, skilful or inept? The answers to these questions don't come from looking in the mirror. We decide who we are on the basis of how others react to us.

Deprived of communication with others, we would have no sense of identity. In his book Bridges Not Walls, John Stewart (2002) dramatically illustrates this fact by citing the case of the famous 'Wild Boy of Aveyron', who spent his early childhood without any apparent human contact. The boy was discovered in January 1800 while digging for vegetables in a French village garden. He showed no behaviour one would expect in a social human. He could not speak but uttered only weird cries. More significant than this absence of social skills was his lack of any identity as a human being. As author Roger Shattuck (1980, p. 37) put it, 'The boy had no human sense of being in the world. He had no sense of himself as a person related to other persons.' Only after the influence of a loving 'mother' did the boy begin to behave—and, we can imagine, think of himself—as a human.

Modern stories support the essential role that communication plays in shaping identity. In 1970, the authorities discovered a twelve-year-old girl (whom they called 'Genie') who had spent virtually all her life in an otherwise empty, darkened bedroom with almost no human contact. The child could not speak and had no sense of herself as a person until she was removed from her family and 'nourished' by a team of caregivers (Rymer, 1993).

Like Genie and the boy of Aveyron, each of us enters the world with little or no sense of identity. We gain an idea of who we are from the way others define us. As Chapter 2 explains, the messages we receive in early childhood are the strongest identity shapers, but the influence of other people continues throughout our lives.

Social Needs

Some social scientists have argued that besides helping define who we are, communication is the principal way relationships are created (Duck and Pittman, 1994). For example, Julie Yingling (1994) asserts that children 'talk friendships into existence'. As Chapter 8 explains, sometimes we deal with social needs directly by discussing our relationships with others. But more often, communication satisfies a variety of social needs without our ever addressing them overtly. Rebecca Rubin