

STUDIES IN THE PROBLEM OF SOVEREIGNTY

---

Harold J. Laski

THE WORKS OF HAROLD J. LASKI

STUDIES IN THE PROBLEM OF SOVEREIGNTY

HAROLD J. LASKI

 Routledge
Taylor & Francis Group
LONDON AND NEW YORK

First published in 1917

This edition first published in 2015

by Routledge

2 Park Square, Milton Park, Abingdon, Oxon, OX14 4RN

and by Routledge

711 Third Avenue, New York, NY 10017

Routledge is an imprint of the Taylor & Francis Group, an informa business

© 1917 Yale University Press

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reprinted or reproduced or utilised in any form or by any electronic, mechanical, or other means, now known or hereafter invented, including photocopying and recording, or in any information storage or retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publishers.

Trademark notice: Product or corporate names may be trademarks or registered trademarks, and are used only for identification and explanation without intent to infringe.

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

ISBN: 978-1-138-81912-2 (Set) eISBN: 978-1-315-74273-1 (Set)

ISBN: 978-1-138-82178-1 (Volume 1)

eISBN: 978-1-315-74272-4 (Volume 1)

Publisher's Note

The publisher has gone to great lengths to ensure the quality of this reprint but points out that some imperfections in the original copies may be apparent.

Disclaimer

The publisher has made every effort to trace copyright holders and would welcome correspondence from those they have been unable to trace.

Printed and bound by CPI Group (UK) Ltd, Croydon, CR0 4YY

THE WORKS OF HAROLD J. LASKI

---

Volume 1

STUDIES IN THE PROBLEM OF SOVEREIGNTY

STUDIES IN THE PROBLEM OF SOVEREIGNTY

By

HAROLD J. LASKI

Of the Department of History in Harvard University Sometime Exhibitioner of New College, Oxford

NEW HAVEN: YALE UNIVERSITY PRESS
LONDON: HUMPHREY MILFORD
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS
MDCCCXVII

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY
YALE UNIVERSITY PRESS

First published, March, 1917
Second printing, May, 1918

Your business as thinkers is to make plainer the way from something to the whole of things; to show the rational connection between your fact and the frame of the universe.

Speeches of Mr. Justice Holmes.

TO
H. A. L. FISHER AND ERNEST BARKER
FELLOWS OF NEW COLLEGE WITH AFFECTIONATE GRATITUDE

PREFACE

This volume is the first of a series of studies in which I hope to discuss in various aspects the theory of the State. Its starting point is the belief that in such a theory, the problem of sovereignty is fundamental, and that only in the light of its conception can any satisfactory attitude be adopted. It is essentially a critical work, and it is only in the most tentative fashion that I have hinted at what seems to me the right avenue of approach. When I have finished similar studies in the political theory of the Catholic Reaction in France during the nineteenth century, and of the Conciliar Movement in the fifteenth, it may be that I shall be able to attempt a more constructive discussion. But it has not seemed to me entirely purposeless to point out the dangers of an attitude fraught with consequences so momentous to the character of our political institutions.

How much it owes to Maitland and Saleilles and Dr. Figgis, I dare not estimate; but if it sends anyone to their books (and particularly to Maitland's) I shall be well content. I owe much, too, to the work of my friend and colleague, Professor McIlwain, from whose 'High Court of Parliament' I have derived a whole fund of valuable ideas. Nor have I, as I hope, failed to learn the lesson to be learned from the constitutional opinions with which Mr. Justice Holmes has enriched this generation. I would add that it was from Mr. Fisher that I first learned to understand the value of individuality, as it was from Mr. Barker that I first learned the meaning of community.

I should like, too, to associate whatever there is of good in the thought of this book, with the name of my friend, Alec Rowan Herron, Scholar of New College and second-lieutenant in the King's Royal Rifles, who fell at Givenchy in the first year of war. What we have lost in him only those of us who had the rare privilege of his intimate friendship can tell; but I may be permitted to say that it was the opinion of those with the right to judge that a very brilliant career lay before him.

This book could never have been written were it not for the constant and splendid sympathy of my friend, Professor Frankfurter of the Harvard Law School. If I mention that, and the debt it of course owes to my wife, it is not in repayment, but in recognition. They, I know, will understand.

I have to thank the editors of the American Political Science Review, the Canadian Law Times, the New Republic, and the Journal of Philosophy, Psychology and Scientific Methods for leave to use material already printed in their pages.

H. J. L.

September 28, 1916.

Harvard University.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
Preface . . . . .	ix
Chapter I. The Sovereignty of the State .	1
Chapter II. The Political Theory of the Dis- ruption . . . . .	27
Chapter III. The Political Theory of the Ox- ford Movement . . . . .	69
Chapter IV. The Political Theory of the Cath- olic Revival . . . . .	121
Chapter V. De Maistre and Bismarck . .	211
Appendix A. Sovereignty and Federalism .	267
Appendix B. Sovereignty and Centralisation .	277
Index . . . . .	289

CHAPTER I

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE STATE<sup>1</sup>

HEGELIANWISE, we can not avoid the temptation that bids us make our State a unity. It is to be all-absorptive. All groups within itself are to be but the ministrants to its life; their reality is the outcome of its sovereignty, since without it they could have no existence. Their goodness is gained only through the overshadowing power of its presence. It alone, so to speak, eternally is; while they exist but to the extent to which its being implies them. The All, America, includes, 'implicates' in James' phrase, its constituent states. They are one with it and of it—one and indivisible. Each has its assigned place and function in the great Whole which gives them life. This is essential; for otherwise we should have what Mr. Bradley calls 'a plurality of reals'; which is to destroy the predicated unity.

Of the exaltation of such unity a long history could be written. To speak only of medieval times, it would have to tell of Dante with his maxime unum as the maxime bonum; nor dare we repaint the picture he drew of that world state which is one because its law is one and its spirit also. State must be, Gregory VII will tell us, absorbed in Church; and so the eighth Boniface, perhaps with some lingering thought of Aquinas in his mind, will declare the heresy of dualism and straightway make claim to the lordship of the world. Binarius numerus infamis—so it was Aquinas wrote; and so it is that your pope must have the plenitudo potestatis and your emperor be legibus solutus. Thus will they embody all and transcend the shifting variety of an inconvenient multiplicity.

<sup>1</sup> Read at the Fourth Conference on Legal and Social Philosophy, at Columbia University, November 27, 1915.

Your medieval thinker deals in worlds; with the Renaissance is born the national State. But only the perspective is altered. Still the problem is this monistic reduction. How to make of many one was surely the problem Henry VIII confronted when he declared the realm of England to be an empire; for if it is capable of such promotion then is its king imperial, and he may work his will with recalcitrant chancellors who look vainly Rome-wards. So, too, with the Stuart. He mistakes the popular basis of the Tudor throne, and thinks a sovereignty in practice theoretical also. It is his, he urges, by a right divine. Like another Richard II he feels that the laws are in his own breast; while non-juring Hickes will preach solemnly of the Stuart rectitude as he lays down the gospel of non-resistance.

It seems far off; yet in truth it is very near to us.

It would be no inapt definition of politics in our time to term it the search for social unity. Whatever political problems we may consider upon this fundamental question, we shall always ultimately be driven back. How far, and in what way, is our society one? How far is there an interest of the Whole, a monistic interest, which transcends the interests of the Many who compose that whole? It is a fundamental question; therefore—as the ‘Parmenides’ bears witness—it is amazingly subtle and difficult. We shall find, I think, that there is one best method of considering our problem. Suppose that on the one hand we adopt the monist solution, what concrete difference will that make to our political life? If we are pluralists, how does that affect our activities? What, in short, are the consequences of our attitude? It is from them we may deduce its truth.

And at the outset, let us note that we tend, in our political thinking, to adopt a sort of mystic monism as the true path of thought. We represent a State as a vast series of concentric circles, each one enveloping the other, as we move from individual to family, from family to village, from village to city, to county, thence to the all-embracing State. We talk of England, Greece, Rome, as single personal forces, transcending the men and women who compose them. We personalise, that is to say, the collective body. ‘Rome,’ writes Lord Bryce, ‘sacrificed her domestic freedom that she might become the mistress of others.’

Here is a Rome beyond her citizens, a woman terrible in the asceticism of her supreme sacrifice.

Clearly the reality of the State's personality is a compulsion we may not resist. But the habit is common to other things also. To the American, New York has a personality no less real than that of the Republic. To the shipowner, Lloyds is not the mere sum of its individual underwriters. When we take any group of people leading a common life, to whom some kindred purpose may be ascribed, we seem to evolve from it a thing, a personality, that is beyond the personalities of its constituent parts. For us that personality is real. Slowly its reality has compelled the law, when dealing with associations, to abandon the theory of fiction. A man who looks at the battlefield of Europe will assuredly not deny that certain personalities, England, France, Germany, are real to the soldiers who die for them. A man who would remain cold to an appeal to stand by Englishmen waxes eloquent over the splendour of England; from all Englishmen he synthesises a thing greater than they. Think of the momentous consequences of such personalising and then ask if we dare attribute fiction to its nature. 'Our fellowship,' wrote Maitland, 'is no fiction, no symbol, no piece of the State's machinery, but a living organism and a real person, with body and members and will of its own.' If this be true, there are within the State enough of these monistic entities, club, trade-union, church, society, town, county, university, each with a group-life, a group-will, to enrich the imagination. Their significance assuredly we may not deny.

Yet, so we are told, the State itself, the society of which they form part, is mysteriously One above them. 'Everywhere the One comes before the Many. All Manyness has its origin in Oneness and to Oneness it returns. Therefore all order consists in the subordination of Plurality to Unity, and never and nowhere can a purpose that is common to Many be effectual unless the One rules over the Many and directs the Many to the goal. . . . Unity is the root of all, and therefore of all social existence.' Here is no mystic thought from the East, but a sober German jurist dealing with the essential political thought of the medieval world. Unity, it is clear, there finds laudation enough. And the State as the expression of that unity enjoys a similar benediction. It, too, must be one and indivisible. Trade-unionists and capitalists alike must surrender the interests of their smaller and antithetic group-persons to the larger demands of that all-embracing One, the State. Of that One it is first that you are part; only in secondary fashion do you belong to church or class or race. In the One differences become harmonised, disappear. There are no rich or poor, Protestants or Catholics, Republicans or Democrats, but all are members of the State. The greatest of ideas takes all others to itself. 'All

Manyness has its origin in Oneness, and to Oneness it returns.'

So may be described the monistic theory of the State. It is a theory of which the importance may not be minimised in our time. That this view—largely perhaps from its evident relation to the dominant philosophy of Hegel—has triumphed not only in modern Germany, but also, in some lesser degree, in modern Europe, is the merest platitude in a world where Treitschke furnishes the theme of drawing-room conversation. A time of crisis unifies everywhere what before bore the appearance of severalty. The exclusive State makes an easy triumph.<sup>2</sup>

We have to admit, so your monist philosopher tells us, that all parts of the State are woven together to make one harmonious whole. What the Absolute is to metaphysics, that is the State to political theory. The unity is logically necessary, for were there independence, one group, as Lotze argued, could never act upon another. Were there independence there would be impenetrability. Yet nothing is so evident as the supreme fact of mutual influence. Pluralism, in an ultimate sense, is therefore impossible; for it would make unintelligible any rational interpretation of society.

Certain implications of this doctrine are worth noting before we attempt any criticism of it. If it be conceded that the analogy of State and <sup>2</sup> On Bismarck and Hegel the reader can consult an admirable paper by Mr. William Clarke in the Contemporary Review for January, 1899.