Preface

This book has been written with the Law Society conveyancing course and examination in mind. It therefore includes a blend of theory and practice, and covers not just domestic conveyancing but also the various provisions giving protection to residential, business and agricultural tenants. However, I hope that the book will be of some use on other conveyancing courses, and that it might also be read by anyone seeking an understanding of the conveyancing transaction and related issues.

I have tried to state the law as at September 1982, but I have included any more recent developments in footnotes wherever possible. To avoid constant repetition of 'he or she' and 'his or her', I have used the male pronoun to include the female.

There are a number of people whose help and assistance I would like to acknowledge. I am very grateful to Marilyn and Avril, without whose typing the book would never have appeared. I would also like to thank Butterworth's editorial staff, for preparing the index and tables of cases and statutes; my father, for typing the footnotes; Lin, for her support and for doing innumerable jobs in the house and garden over the last year or so without the dubious benefit of my help; and past and present students at Trent Polytechnic, without whom . . .
