Acknowledgments

The origins of this book go back to my doctoral thesis, which I completed at Queen's University Belfast in December 2006. Whilst researching this thesis, I had two fantastic supervisors, Prof Tom Hadden and Prof Kieran McEvoy. Throughout the ups and downs of this research both Kieran and Tom patiently provided me with encouragement, support and inspiration and for that I am truly grateful. I would also like to acknowledge the valuable contribution made by my examiners Prof Jeremy Sarkin and Prof Colin Harvey, whose positive comments on the thesis spurred me on to write this book. In addition, I would like to thank my colleagues at the Law School at Queen's University Belfast, particularly Prof Brice Dickson and Dr Jean Allain, for commenting on sections of the book manuscript. I would also like to acknowledge the Law School for providing me with financial support to attend training courses and conferences, which have all enriched this book. During my doctoral research, I was also very grateful to have received funding from the Department for Employment and Learning in Northern Ireland.

During the process of preparing this book, I have been very fortunate to work with Hart Publishing Ltd. In particular, I would like to thank Richard Hart for his enthusiasm for this project and for the clarity he has provided me with on what seemed to me at times a daunting process. I would also like to thank Rachel Turner at Hart. Thanks should go also to the reviewers of my book proposal, Prof Diane Orentlicher and Prof David Dyzenhaus, for their interest in my work and for their helpful comments.

I further feel indebted to those individuals who kindly gave their time to read the earlier drafts and provide me with comments, even though they may not have agreed with all my arguments. Firstly, I want to thank Mark Freeman who has been a star, in not just reading the whole manuscript, but also being willing to exchange ideas and texts of amnesty laws. I would also like to thank Dr Leslie Vinjamuri for her comments and encouragement. Finally, I am grateful to Christopher Hall at Amnesty International for providing me with his views on the legal issues.

During the years in which I was researching this project and creating the Amnesty Law Database, I have also received help from many individuals, particularly librarians and NGO workers, who kindly responded to my pleas for information on the harder to find amnesties. I would also like thank those individuals, such as Prof Ron Slye, who kindly shared unpublished work with me.

Finally, I would like to give my sincere and heartfelt thanks to all my friends and family, who have listened sympathetically when I was finding the research difficult and have celebrated with me during the high points. Particular thanks should go to my parents and my sister Leanne, and also to the Hayes family. I would particularly like to thank my 'PhD girls', Dr Anna Eriksson and Dr Vicky Conway for all those evenings we spent drinking wine and making sense of our theses, and also Prof George Pavlakos and Estelle Zinsstag. Most especially, however, I want to thank my darling Richard for always believing in me and supporting me through this process.
