Camp and Combat on the Sinai and Palestine Front

To my darling wife Robin

Acknowledgments

This book has taken on much of the character of a military campaign. Though one person's work may be at the heart of it, an army of others were needed to push it forward. Throughout the process, from the time more than a decade ago when it began as a dissertation, my main professional guide has been Professor R. J. Q. Adams, who piloted me through two degrees with the patience of Job and the encouragement of his own example of scholarship and professionalism. To him I owe a great and ever-increasing debt.

This book could not have been written without financial help from many quarters. The lion's share of this help came from a Fulbright Fellowship to Australia, administered by the U. S. Department of State and the Australian American Fulbright Commission. A grant from the Lois Roth Foundation enabled me to visit Adelaide, a fruitful trip that would have been impossible otherwise. The Department of History of Texas A&M University awarded me a summer research grant that covered the majority of my work in Great Britain, and much of the core material for this work is due to that grant. My appreciation also goes to the Faculty Development committee at Converse College, who awarded me a summer grant to help with revisions of the text. I am also greatly indebted to the George Dean Johnson, Jr Fund for History in Converse's History and Politics Department and to its administrator Dr Melissa Walker, George Dean Johnson, Jr, Professor of History, who made it possible to add the maps and most of the photographs in this volume and to complete many of the last sets of revisions and administrative duties required by the book.

The flexibility and careful planning of many at the Australian American Fulbright Commission, especially Lindy Fisher and Mark Darby, made my experience in Australia entirely positive. For sponsoring me and welcoming me as one of their own, I will remain grateful to the members of the School of History at the Australian Defence Force Academy, most notably Jeffrey Grey, who was unfailingly generous with his time, his influence, and even his car. Professor Peter Dennis, Head of School Robin Prior, Al Palazzo, and John Conner also offered their insights and resources to aid my work.

A great many archivists offered help with this work, and I offer my appreciation to the staffs at the Imperial War Museum (both manuscripts and sound archives), the National Archives of the United Kingdom, the National War Museum of Scotland, the Liddell Hart Centre for Military Archives, the British Library (keepers of the Manuscripts, Humanities Section, and India Office Records), the Australian War Memorial, the National Library of Australia, the Alexander Turnbull Library (particularly David Colquhoun) and the sound archive of the National Library of New Zealand, the National Archives of New Zealand, the State Library of New South Wales, the Australian Manuscripts Collection of the State Library of Victoria, the Library Information Service of Western Australia, and the Auckland War Memorial Museum. Worthy of special mention, however, are the courteous archivists and staff of the State Library of South Australia, who made work in Adelaide a pleasure; the staff of the National Archives of Australia, who knew my name by the second day of my work there; the staff at the Library of Congress's Photographic Archive, who went the extra mile in providing guidance and in applying expertise and creativity to my photo searches; Mr Carlile at the Auckland War Memorial Museum, who found and copied records for me while his archive was in boxes, under construction dust; the remarkably efficient and helpful Dolores Ho at the Kippenberger Military Archive of the National Army Museum in Waiouru, New Zealand; and the staff of the archival section at Christchurch City Library, who offered far more specialized attention than their jobs demanded.

I have been especially pleased and overwhelmed by the kindness and the interest in my project that the relatives of the soldiers in my study have shown. I have corresponded with a great many wonderful people in these families, many of whom offered insights and details about their soldier-relatives that prove that, at least among their families, these fighting men have never for a moment been forgotten. A number of these family members are listed below. Many other people selflessly gave their time to help me find the relatives, including Steven Smith of Adelaide, Greg Ziser and the members of the Warwick and District Historical Society, Dawn Scrymgeour, and Shirley Eastick and the members of the RSL of Warwick.

The author and publishers thank the following archives for access to and permission to reproduce materials from their collections, the specifics of which are noted in the text, the captions, or the notes: the Imperial War Museum (both the Department of Documents and the Sound Archive); the National War Museum of Scotland; the British Library; the Australian War Memorial (for manuscripts and photographs); the National Library of Australia; the Kippenberger Military Archive at the National Army Museum of New Zealand; the Alexander Turnbull

Library (for manuscripts and a photograph) and the sound archive of the National Library of New Zealand; the State Library of South Australia (for manuscripts and photographs); the State Library of Queensland (for a photograph); and the State Library of Victoria.

The author and publishers wish to thank the following for permission to reproduce copyright material or to reproduce materials in their collections: Her Majesty the Queen and the Controller of Her Majesty's Stationery Office for the use of Crown Copyright material through an Open Government License, including materials from the National Archives of the United Kingdom, the National War Museum of Scotland, the British Library, and the Australian War Memorial; the 3rd Viscount Allenby of Megiddo and Felixstowe and the Trustees of the Liddell Hart Centre for Military Archives for quotations from the letters of the 1st Viscount Allenby in the Allenby Papers and the Robertson Papers (and to Lord Allenby for his insights into General Allenby's motivations and actions); the Trustees of the Liddell Hart Centre for Military Archives at King's College London and the Robertson family for permission to use and quote from the Robertson Papers; Alisdair Roderick Murray for quotations from General Sir Archibald Murray's papers (and for valuable perspectives on General Murray's views); Patricia K. Bettany for Douglas Calcutt's papers; Mrs Sylvia Clark for quotations from R. W. Macey's papers; Mrs M.S. Nathan for quotations from J. M. Galloway's papers; Grace Gwen White, Ray Evans, Robert White, and Dean White for quotations from John Evans's papers; Lady Mary V. Sinclair for quotations from Eric Townsend's papers; Mrs Joyce E. Overall for quotations from J. B. Beer's papers; Pru Acheson for quotations from Wilfrid Kent Hughes's papers; Joan Sadlier for quotations from E. J. McCarthy's papers; Peter Arnold for quotations from O. H. Best's papers; Prue Astley and Nannette Astley for Otho Hewett's drawing, "Camp Followers," in The Kia Ora Coo-ee (Cairo), 15 June 1918; Phillip Bate and his family for J. T. S. Scrymgeour's poem, "The Jordan Valley's Inhabitants," in Echoes of the Australian Light Horse in Egypt and Palestine 1917-1918 (Warwick, Queensland, Australia: Warwick Daily News, no date); and Wendell Peacock for quotations from Ion Idriess's papers.

Every effort has been made to trace rights holders, but if any have been inadvertently overlooked, the publishers would be pleased to make the necessary arrangements at the first opportunity.

Thank you to Jessica Collyer and Morgan Roach for their extensive help in securing these permissions, and again to Jessica Collyer, who did a host of important small jobs in preparing the final text of the manuscript. I am also grateful for her work and Sherry Gwinn's work in helping me find some of the illustrations in this book, and for Monica Lampley's help with some data entry. My thanks go, too, to Converse College, their employer, and to Vice President Jeffrey Barker, who provided for some of this clerical support through Converse's Faculty Excellence Funds.

No academic book could be written without supportive local librarians, and I have had been very fortunate in having worked with a number of excellent librarians at my home institutions. The staff of the Evans Library and Cushing Library at Texas A&M, including Dean Fred Heath, Joel Kitchens, and Dr Kathy Jackson, were invaluable, as were the staff of the Mickel Library at Converse College, particularly Wade Woodward, Dell Morgan, and Shannon Wardlow.

I am grateful for the advice and aid of a great many other people along the way. Dr Robert P. Wettemann of the US Air Force Academy has been an unfailing friend and supporter, whose encouragement and suggestions from beginning to end made many rough places smooth. Professor Joe P. Dunn has been a faithful mentor and tireless advocate for me, and his editorial comments and ideas have improved the work markedly. Many others have offered expert and wise commentary on parts of this document, including Drs Doris Bergen, Alan Millett, Stephen Bourque, Richard Damms, and Stanley J. Adamiak, along with members of academic audiences at several conferences where I presented parts of this research, including meetings of the Society for Military History, the Mid-America Conference on History, the Western Conference on British Studies, the International Security/Internal Security Conference, and the American Historical Association. At Texas A&M, Professors Joseph G. Dawson III, Arnold P. Krammer, Henry C. Schmidt, Claude L. Gibson, and Andrew J. Kirkendall offered their advice and expertise as members of my doctoral committee and afterwards. My thanks go out, too, to Mary Johnson, Dr Keith J. Volanto, and Dr Larry Smith. I am grateful to Dr Donald S. Frazier for his work in creating the maps. I apologize to any whose names have been unjustly left off of this list. Though many have helped to support me and improve this work, any mistakes that remain in the text are completely mine.

My most profound gratitude is reserved for my family, who stood with me throughout the research, writing, and rewriting of this document. My parents, Dr Ronald L. Woodfin and Martha C. Woodfin, helped in a hundred ways, financial, emotional, and professional, and they have only added to the lifetime of thanks that I have for them. My father commented on manuscript pages and volunteered for the colossal job of preparing the index, and my mother helped with the index and proofread the final typescript. The cheerful support of my children, Joshua, Xander, and Becky, brightened the path. My long-suffering and loving wife Robin accompanied me on many wanderings around the world, even reading diaries beside me in New Zealand and Scotland. I sought her advice on a thousand issues and found her wisdom to be unerring. Without her steadfast encouragement and patience, this book could never have been written, and to her it is dedicated.
