CARIBBEAN INTEGRATION LAW

To Nicola and Alec, my two muses.

Acknowledgments

This book could not have been written without the encouragement and assistance of a large number of persons, to all of whom I express my gratitude. The Hon Mr Justice Andrew Burgess must be thanked for pushing me to develop a more active interest in Caribbean integration when he assigned me to teach a new course in 1998 called 'Caribbean Integration Law'. A decade and a half of students have continuously re-energized my interest in the field and, through their persistent questioning, have encouraged me to work harder to master the topic. A number of researchers helped me develop my course materials over the years and one, Jeffrey Foreman, particularly assisted in updating Caribbean statutory references and in providing further research on the history and economics of the region. I also thank the staff of the CARICOM Secretariat for their hospitality during my week of research at their Headquarters in August 2012. Safiya Ali, the General Counsel of CARICOM, was especially helpful in providing clear and informed views of the internal workings of CARICOM and the status of various treaties and instruments. Several persons provided comments on earlier drafts of the book and I would like to thank Dr Chantal Ononaiwu and Professor Alina Kaczorowska-Ireland for their constructive, critical readings of several chapters. I of course take full responsibility for any errors or omissions.

Finally, I would like to thank most of all my wife, Nicola Berry, and father, Edward Berry, for their constant encouragement. Without the exacting proofreading of my father, the book would lack clarity and precision in many areas. Without the sacrifice of Nicola, the book probably would not exist.
