The Author

Michael John Daly, BA (Adelaide) studied anthropology, politics and psychology at the University of Adelaide and has worked for the Australian Ministry of Labour since 1974. In 1980 he was seconded to the Papua New Guinea Government and worked as a conciliator of industrial disputes following attachment to the Department of Labour and Industry in Port Moresby. In 1982 he was appointed as the industrial relations lecturer in the Department of Political Science and Administrative Studies at the University of Papua New Guinea. In 1981 he was elected as the honorary Secretary of the Industrial Relations Society of Papua New Guinea. In 1983 he prepared the paper on dispute settlement and the promotion of industrial peace in Papua New Guinea for the International Labour Organisation. After he completed his period of secondment he returned in 1984 to the Australian Ministry of Labour in Canberra. His research interests centre primarily on the operation of industrial relations systems, particularly in developing economies.

The author is an employee of the Federal Department of Industrial Relations. The views expressed in the monograph are his own and do not necessarily reflect those of his employer or his colleagues.
